It has come to my attention that this regained popularity in recent weeks. As the author, I'm deeply humbled by the support in the form of reblogs and likes even despite the crass language. I'm not Lakota or from the areas of these tribes. I'm from a Pueblo in New Mexico (shout-out to the Pueblo camp at standing Rock!) And Navajo Nation. I made this post at s tumultuous time in my life when I had accrued so much capital and privilege in the white man's world. Back when these were working links, I was a community organizer that went into a post traumatic stress disorder episode while this post was getting popular 2 years ago when Standing Rock was still at camp. I ask folks to reblog this out of respect to the many people and messages passed that allows for campaigns like these to exist. I'll never know how much was raised but know that y'all were a part of something huge and important. That two years is not a long time and progress is like watching grass grow.

elvish-sky asked:

i am from Massachusetts!!

gossip-girl-of-middle-earth answered:

Hey, hey!! The closest state I've been to around Massachusetts (fuck that's a tough one to spell, lordy) is probably New York!

Your scenery up there is absolutely gorgeous

ARGHHH I WANNA GO BACK!!

But also, every time I think of someone actually in America, I get weirded out. Granted I've been there a few times, but to think people actually live there without free healthcare and university tuition...? It weirds me out so much, because you Americans to the rest of the world are like tigers—something you know about from media and zoos, but can't possibly imagine actually existing irl

This isn't meant as an insult btw, America is just so famous it's bizarre to think normal life happens there every day and yeah, it's usually very pretty up here, especially in the fall! (it's raining buckets right now, so not so much) Massachusetts is the worst thing to spell ever, so I never do, autocorrect is a lifesaver 😂

Lmao that could totally be an insult and i wouldn't be offended at all, America really sucks sometimes.

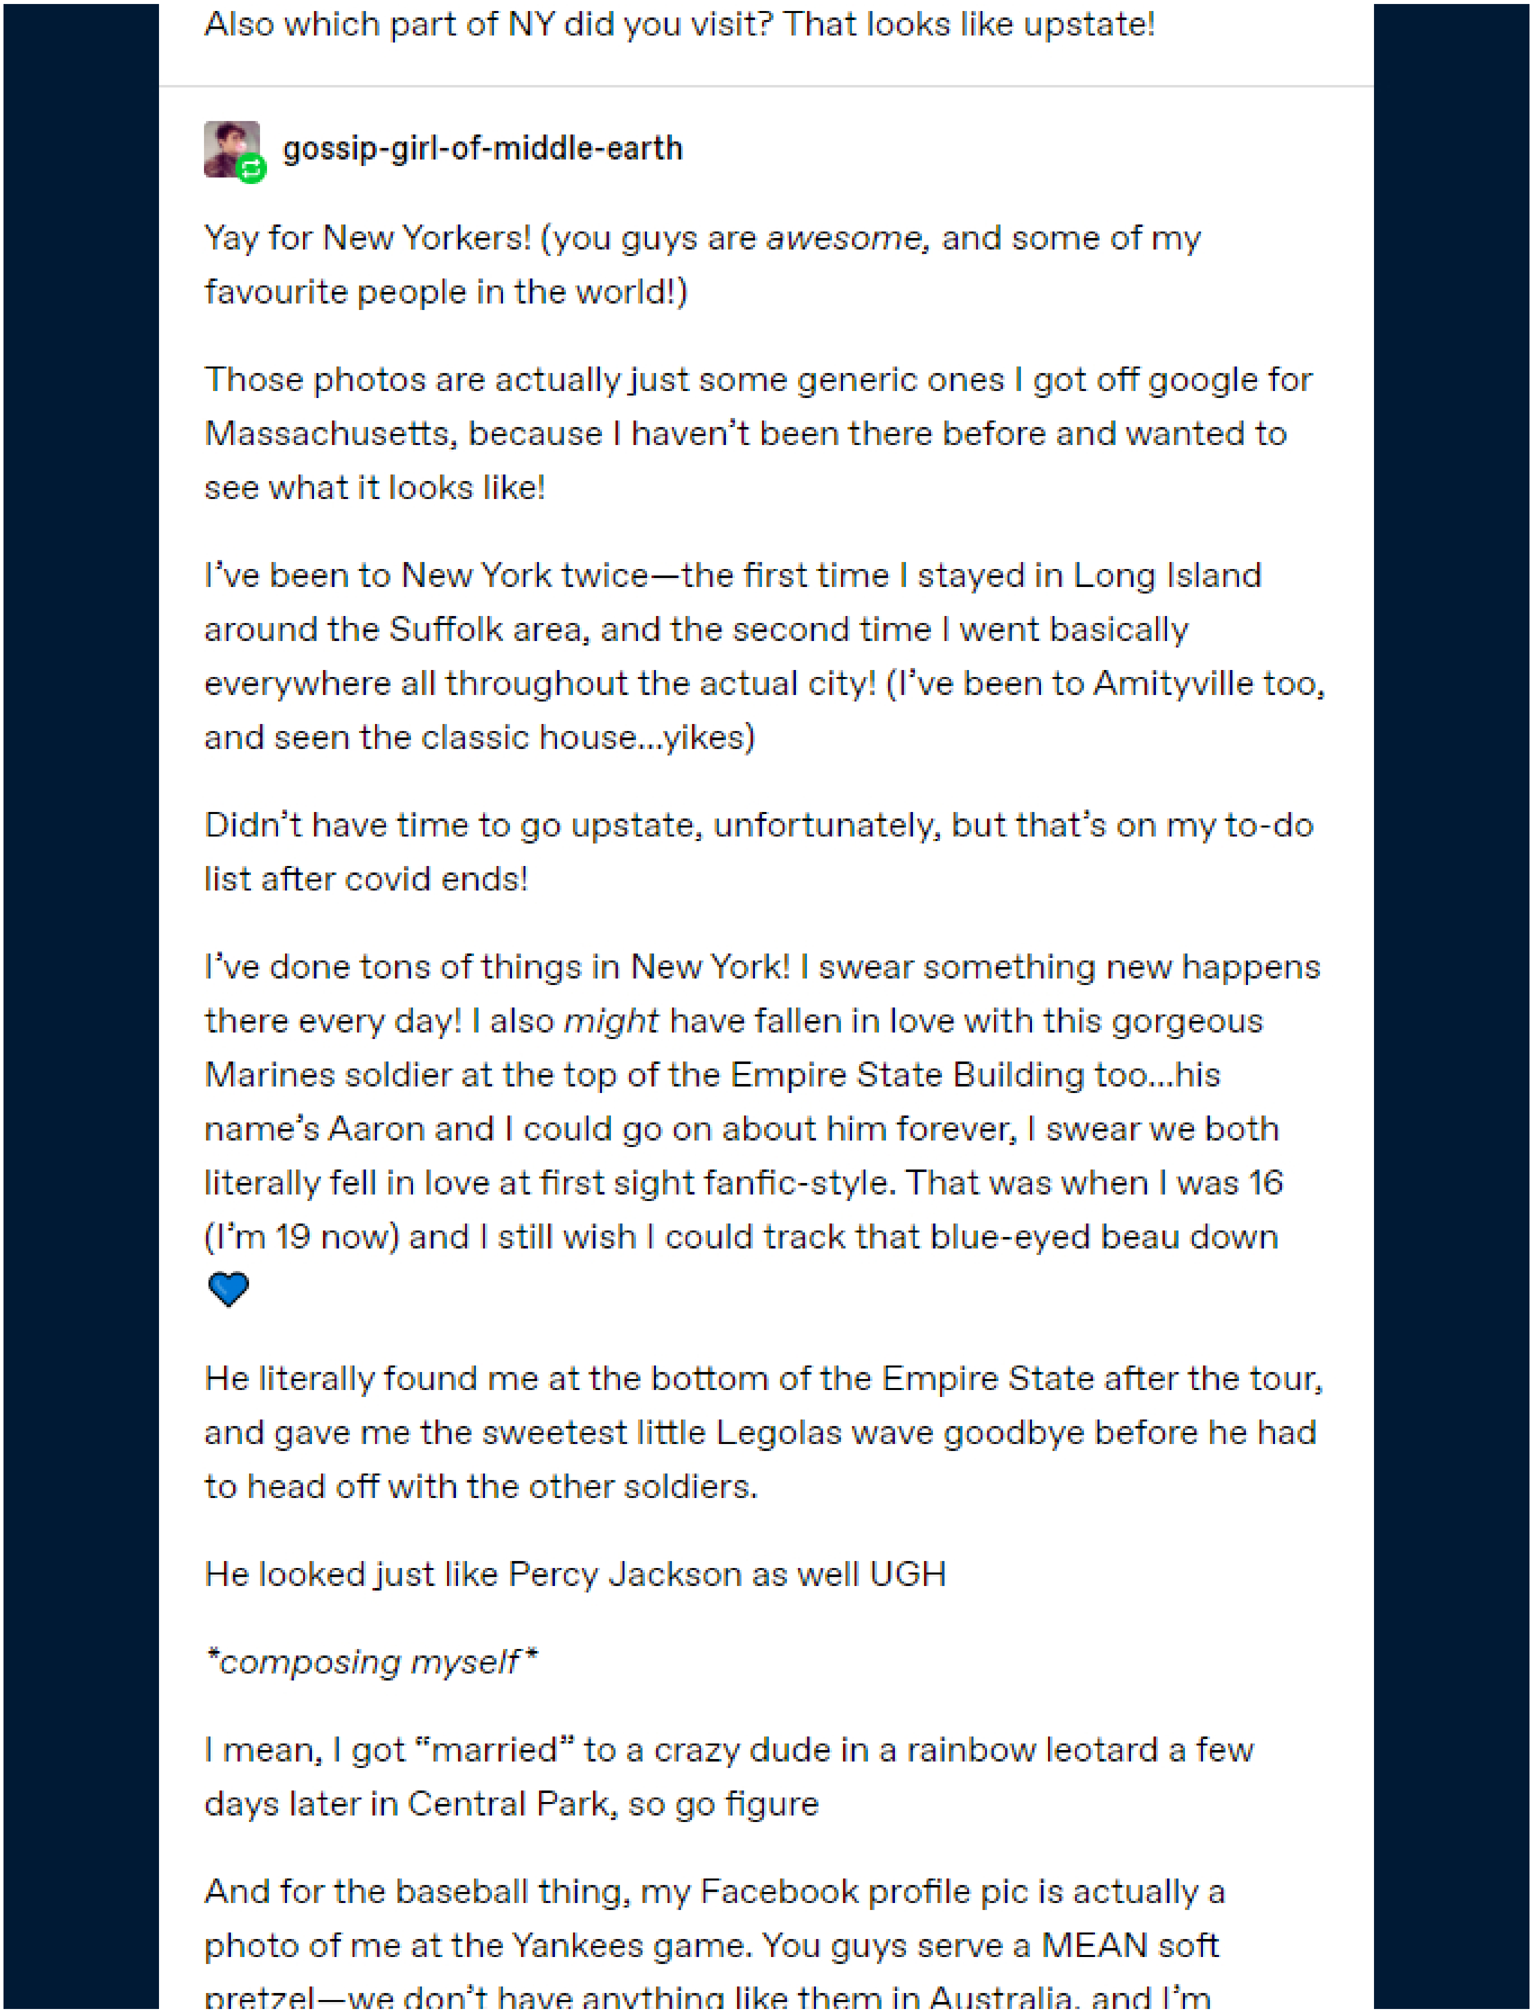
(Sorry not sorry, very proud New Yorker here haha)



Also which part of NY did you visit? That looks like upstate!

gossip-girl-of-middle-earth

Yay for New Yorkers! (you guys are awesome, and some of my favourite people in the world!)

Those photos are actually just some generic ones I got off google for Massachusetts, because I haven't been there before and wanted to see what it looks like!

I've been to New York twice—the first time I stayed in Long Island around the Suffolk area, and the second time I went basically everywhere all throughout the actual city! (I've been to Amityville too, and seen the classic house...yikes)

Didn't have time to go upstate, unfortunately, but that's on my to-do list after covid ends!

I've done tons of things in New York! I swear something new happens there every day! I also might have fallen in love with this gorgeous Marines soldier at the top of the Empire State Building too...his name's Aaron and I could go on about him forever, I swear we both literally fell in love at first sight fanfic-style. That was when I was 16 (I'm 19 now) and I still wish I could track that blue-eyed beau down 💙

He literally found me at the bottom of the Empire State after the tour, and gave me the sweetest little Legolas wave goodbye before he had to head off with the other soldiers.

He looked just like Percy Jackson as well UGH

composing myself

I mean, I got "married" to a crazy dude in a rainbow leotard a few days later in Central Park, so go figure

And for the baseball thing, my Facebook profile pic is actually a photo of me at the Yankees game. You guys serve a MEAN soft pretzel—we don't have anything like them in Australia, and I'm seriously craving one! Especially with the mustard 😋

These are just the last three fics I wrote. I appreciate the likes, believe me I do, but you have to understand. Likes do nothing for content creators. It's the reblogs. Because that's how you find shit on your dashboard. Through reblogs. Not likes. This isn't twitter or tiktok or instagram. This is a website that's run by the reblog system.

Reblogging helps content creators put their stuff out there. Why do you think so many people stopped writing fanfic and creating beautiful fanart and edits? It's because they put in hours of work and don't get nearly enough notes for their masterpieces. Yes we do this because we enjoy it but like...some validation won't hurt. A boost of confidence here and there might be all someone needs to finish whatever thing they started and left.

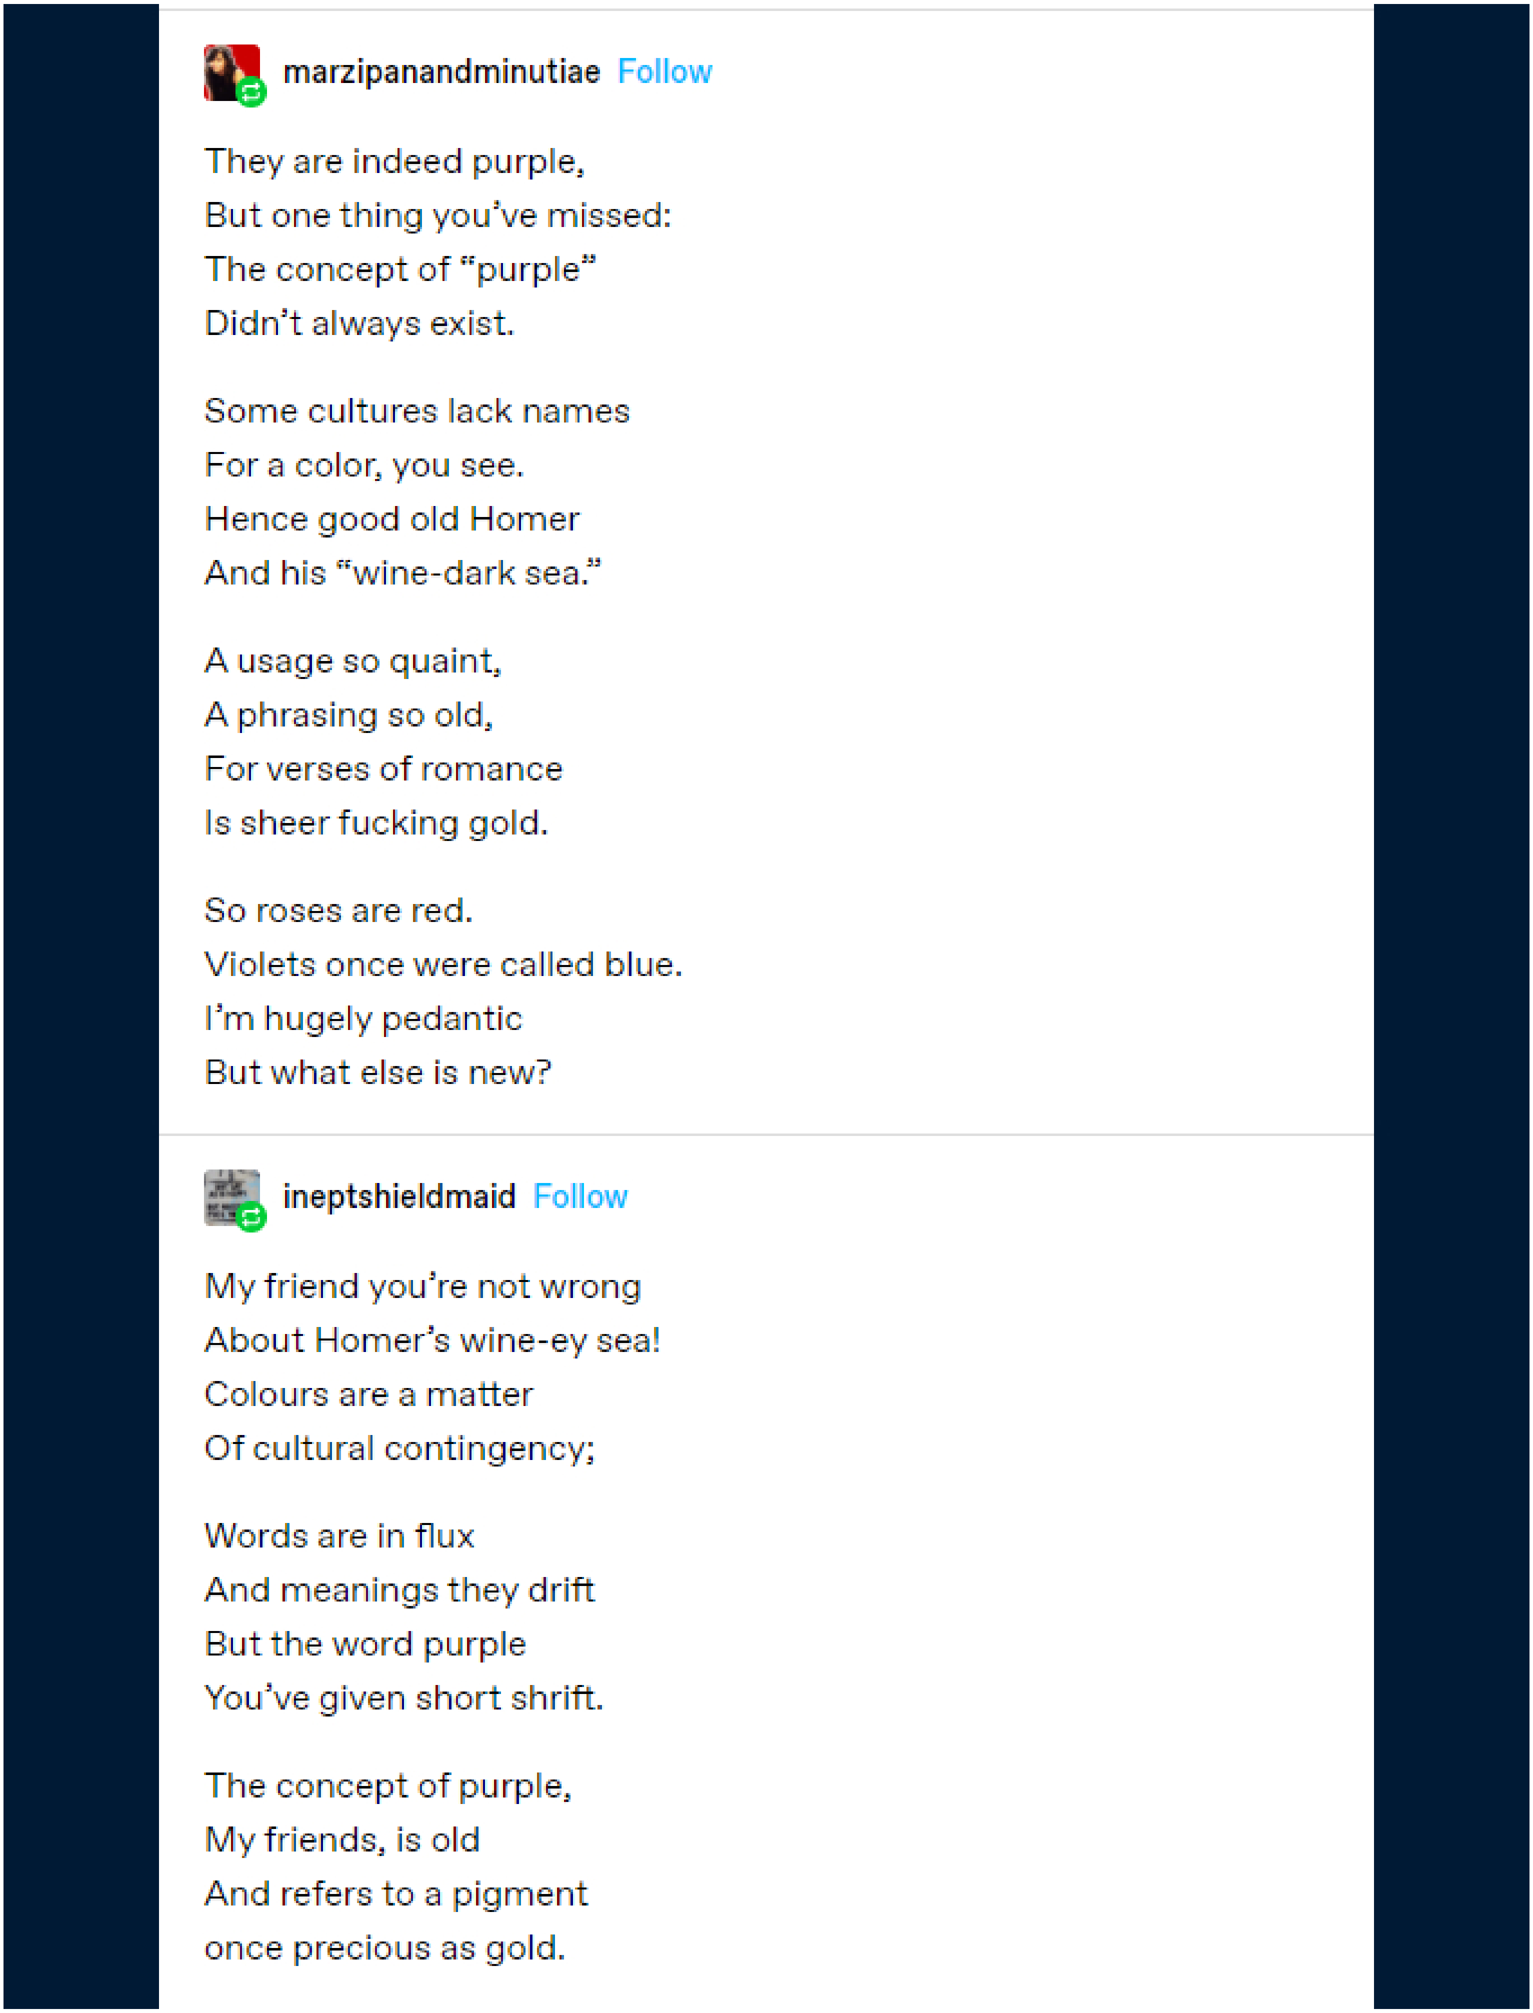
Roses are red, that much is true, but violets are purple, not fucking blue.

feels-for-the-fictional

I have been waiting for this post all my life.



marzipanandminutiae

They are indeed purple,
But one thing you've missed:
The concept of "purple"
Didn't always exist.

Some cultures lack names
For a color, you see.
Hence good old Homer
And his "wine-dark sea."

A usage so quaint,
A phrasing so old,
For verses of romance
Is sheer fucking gold.

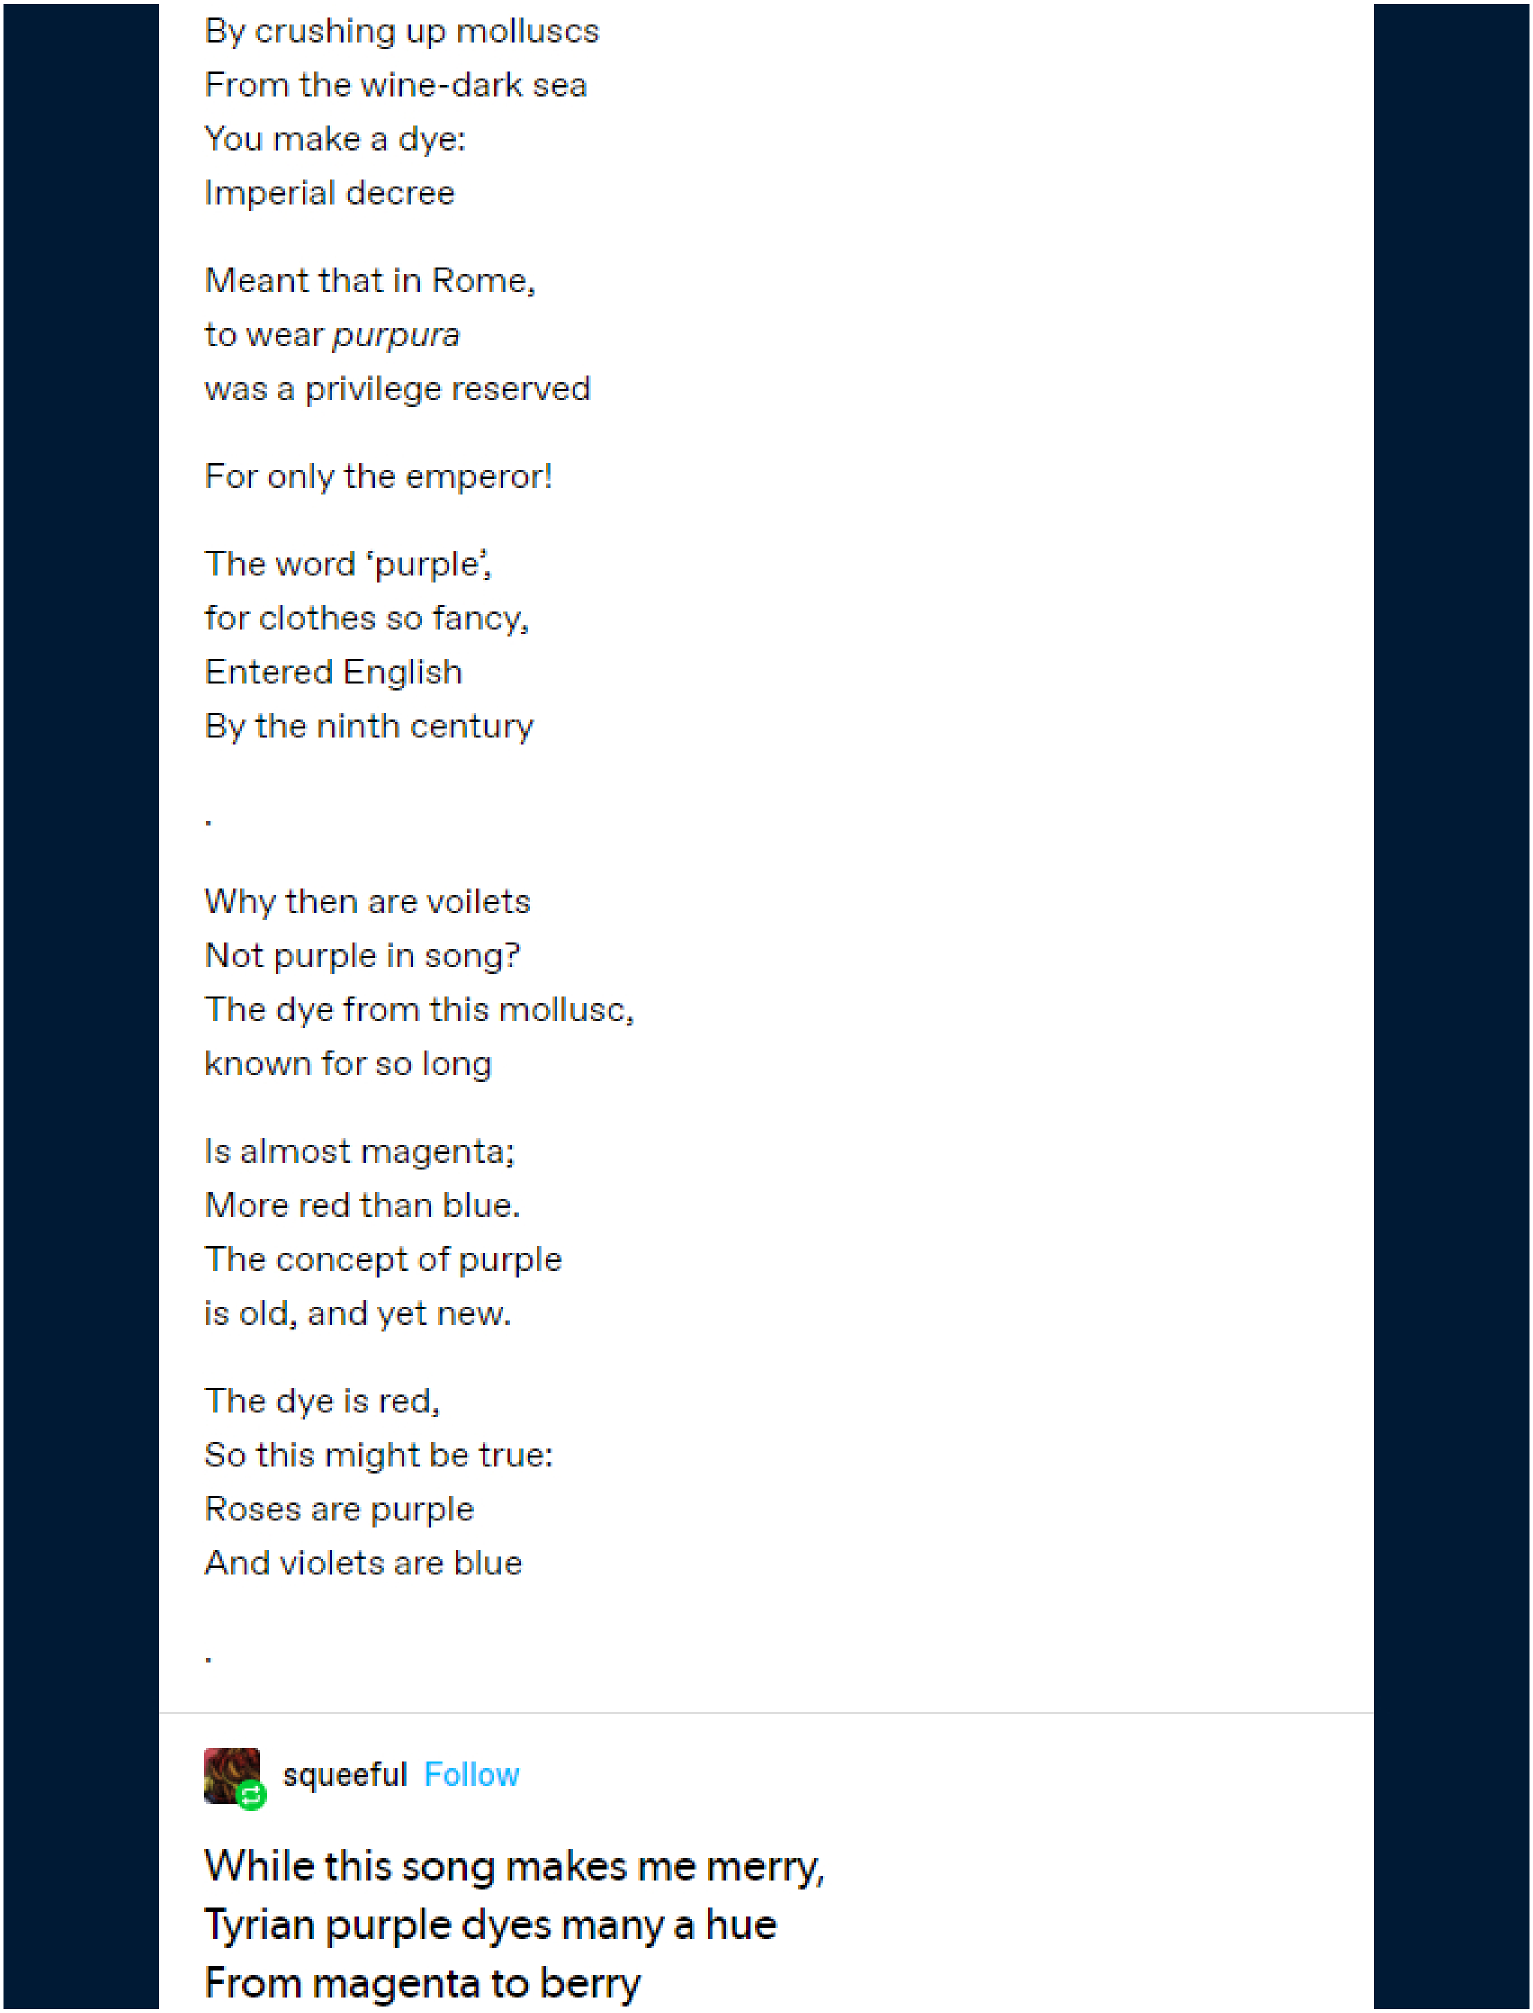
So roses are red.
Violets once were called blue.
I'm hugely pedantic
But what else is new?

ineptshieldmaid

My friend you're not wrong
About Homer's wine-ey sea!
Colours are a matter
Of cultural contingency;

Words are in flux
And meanings they drift
But the word purple
You've given short shrift.

The concept of purple,
My friends, is old
And refers to a pigment
once precious as gold.



By crushing up molluscs
From the wine-dark sea
You make a dye:
Imperial decree

Meant that in Rome,
to wear purpura
was a privilege reserved

For only the emperor!

The word ‘purple’,
for clothes so fancy,
Entered English
By the ninth century

Why then are voilets
Not purple in song?
The dye from this mollusc, known for so long

Is almost magenta;
More red than blue.
The concept of purple
is old, and yet new.

The dye is red,
So this might be true:
Roses are purple
And violets are blue

squeeful

While this song makes me merry,
Tyrian purple dyes many a hue
From magenta to berry

And a true purple too.

But fun as it is to watch this poetic race
The answer is staring you right in the face:
Roses are red and violets are blue
Because nothing fucking rhymes with purple.

Purple is prose and as we all know

English is not a tongue neat.

Words are alive, and flexible, they jibe

And from our sick brains they meet:

Rhyming with purple to the lexicon burgle,

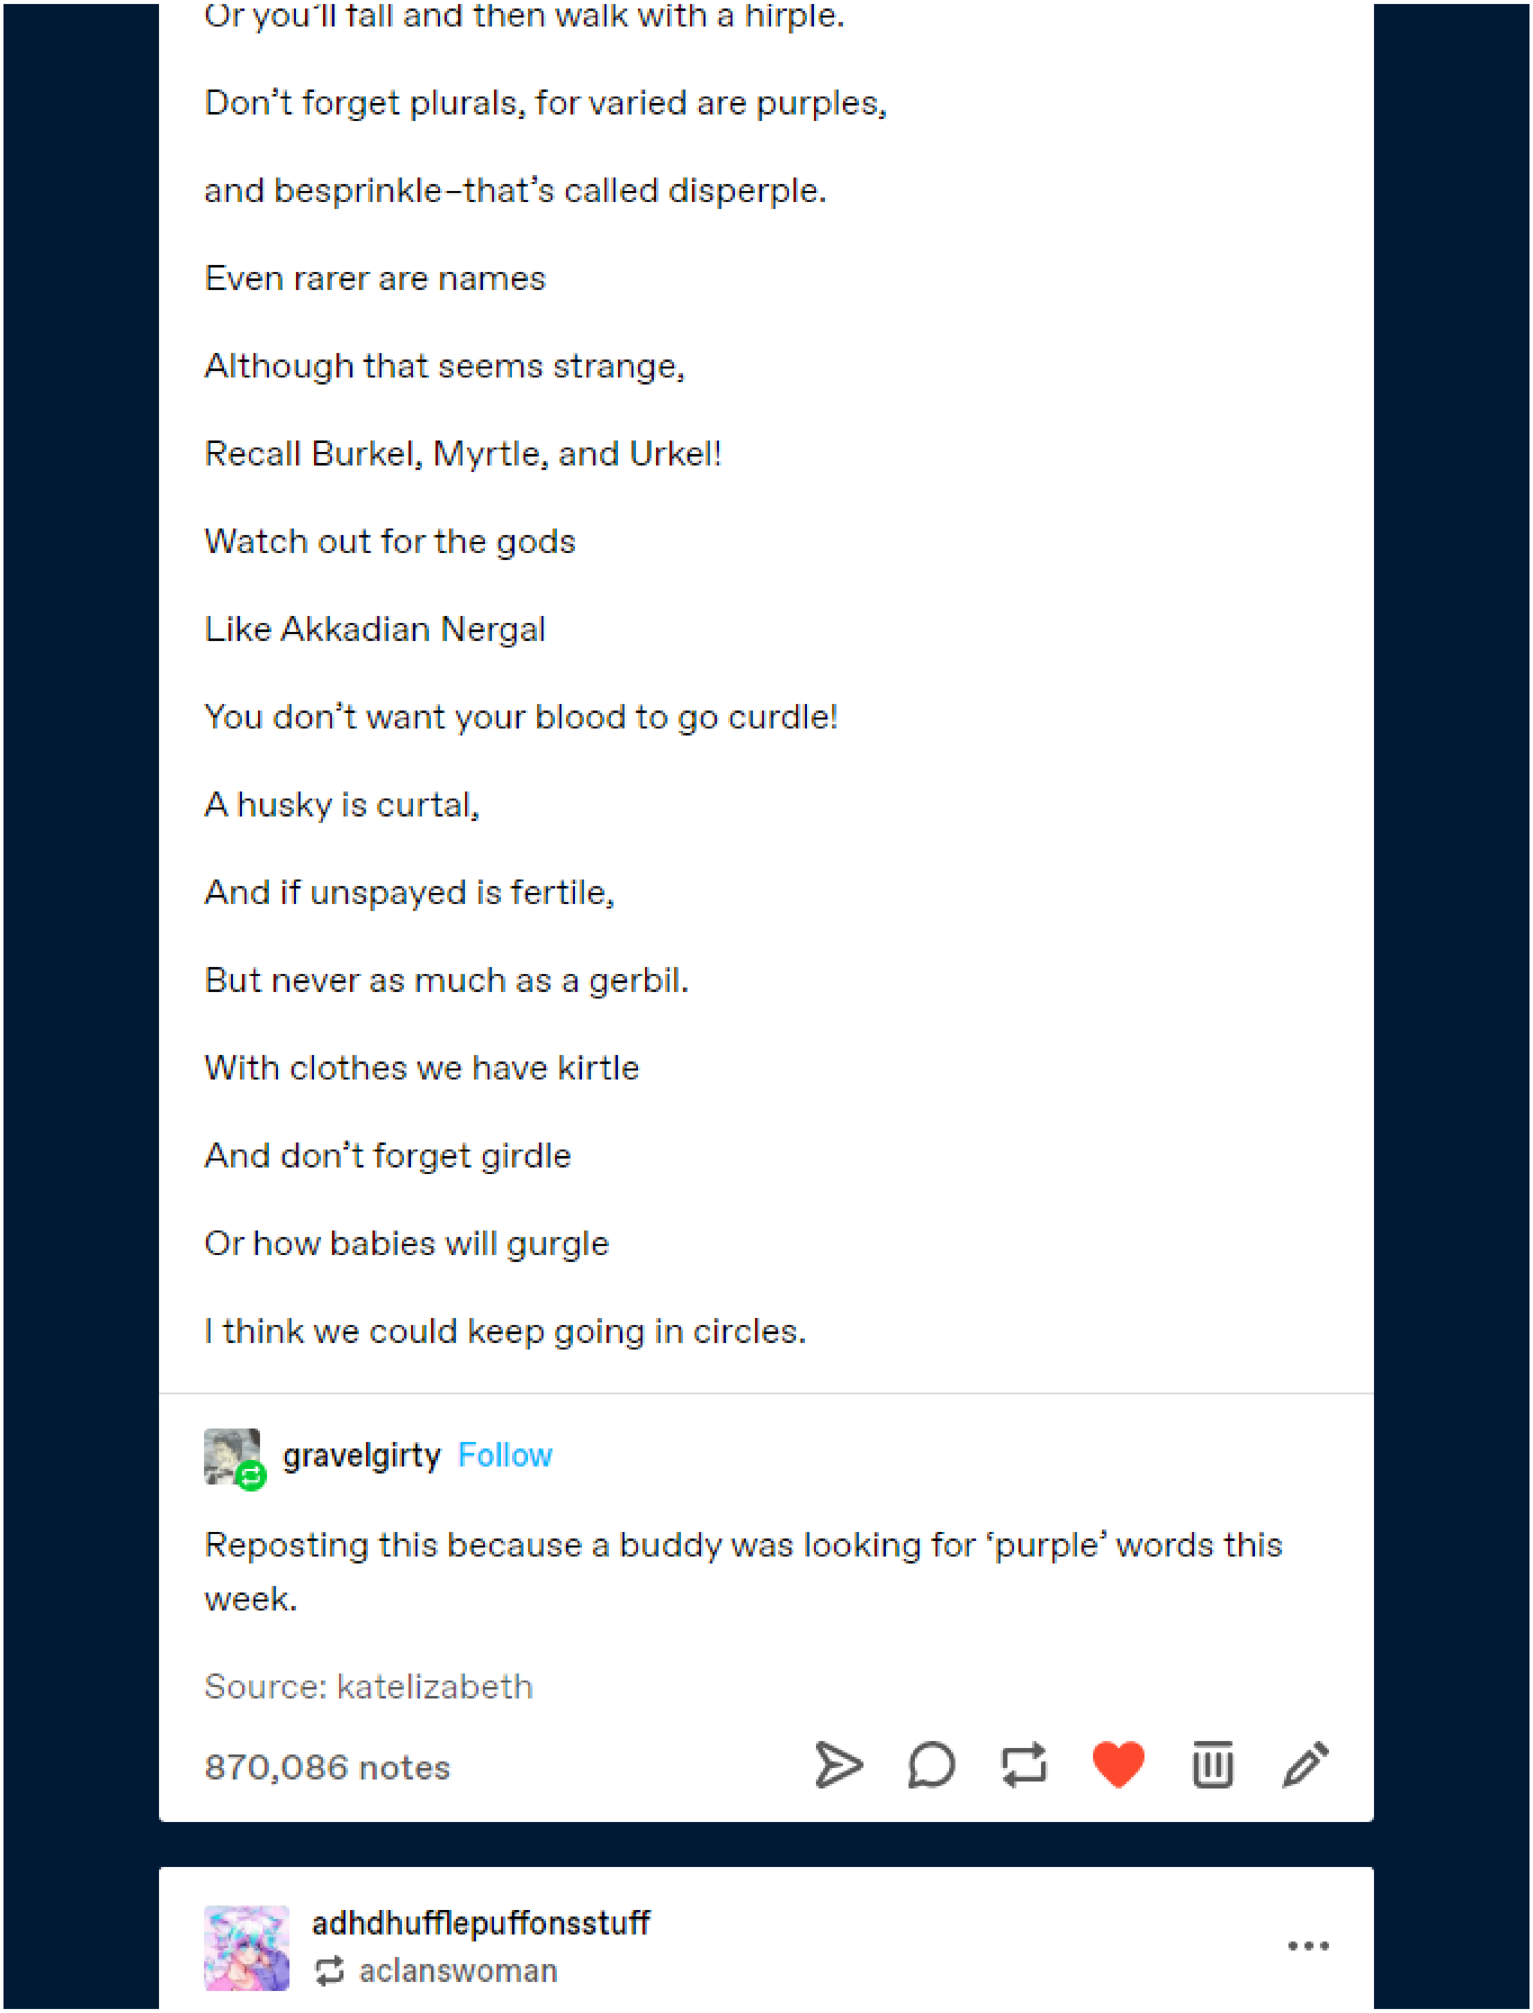
And remember there's more than just herbal

We can color–empurple,

(Alternatively impurple)

And we can also enrage! Bepurple!

You can't ride a horse without a good curple



Or you'll fall and then walk with a hirple.

Don't forget plurals, for varied are purples, and besprinkle–that's called disperple.

Even rarer are names

Although that seems strange,

Recall Burkel, Myrtle, and Urkel!

Watch out for the gods

Like Akkadian Nergal

You don't want your blood to go curdle!

A husky is curtal,

And if unspayed is fertile,

But never as much as a gerbil.

With clothes we have kirtle

And don't forget girdle

Or how babies will gurgle

I think we could keep going in circles.

this isn't the first time i've had this said to me this week, it's not even the first time i've had this exact phrase posted at me this week. come on these people are not well intentioned but wrongheaded lefties

cursmudgeon

I've seen this post on my dash couple times and was confused by the phrasing till I read it over more closely and I've seen at least one other person confused by it so I'm gonna clarify the point they're making. Kink at pride discourse is likely being used as a wedge issue by right wing trolls to stoke infighting in the queer community. This has been a recruitment tactic for right wing groups for a long time, stoking fears about the corrupting forces of gay/trans/whatever other "deviant" people on children is a very effective way to maintain power for the people who campaign on fighting against our rights and safety. Flattening the discussion of how queer love is policed differently and how things that are considered unremarkable between straight couples suddenly become sexualized in a queer context down to "you just want to show your dick to children" is a very classic homophobic strategy and we should be critical of who is using it. It's very easy to make a sockpuppet account and pretend to be a gay teenager and use that supposed state of innocence as a weapon to stoke infighting and attempt to delegitimize the entire community. It happened during gamergate, it happened during the ace discourse and the mogai discourse on tumblr, it's not surprising that it would happen with "kink at pride" discourse. And the coordinated nature of the harassment around this stuff we should be extra wary of who is saying this stuff and why.

anyways if any of you need to prove being trans isnt just a “trend” or a “fad”, here are some trans men and women who have been around longer than your boomer family members.

Lili Elbe was a Danish painter and trans woman born in 1882, and she got her bottom surgery in the year 1930, almost 10 years before WWII started. Lili passed away in 1931, as the surgery was still in its experimental phase, and her immune system rejected part of her

in 1930, Dora Richter, a trans woman born in 1891, had her bottom surgery, but she was unfortunately killed in a Nazi attack on the institute where she worked. the institute researched gender and its relation to bio sex, and the Nazis didn't want anyone to research anything related to transgender people, as they thought it was immoral and wanted to purge the world of trans people.

Laurence Michael Dillon was born in May of 1915. He was a scientist and professional rower, who did just as well after transitioning and playing on the mens team, as before when he was playing on the womens' team. he also passed out twice hitting his head, due to hypoglycemia, and when he came to in the hospital the second time, he persuaded his doctor into giving him top surgery. he ended up meeting a plastic surgeon and convinced them to give him plastic surgery in 1962. people heard of a trans man who used to be a British doctor, but Michael just wanted to live in peace. His autobiography inspired Roberta Corwell, a British trans woman, to become the first British trans woman to recieve bottom surgery. He passed away after collapsing on a hike due to his hypoglycemia.

Christine Jorgensen was drafted during WWII, came back in the 50s, and immediately started taking estrogen. she got permission from the Danish Minister Of Justice to get top and bottom surgery. she got the surgeries in 1952, and, due to her being one of the first people to openly transition, she became a celebrity when she returned to NYC. she used her platform to bring light to trans people and their struggles, and became one of the founders of the sexual revolution. she passed away in May of 1989.

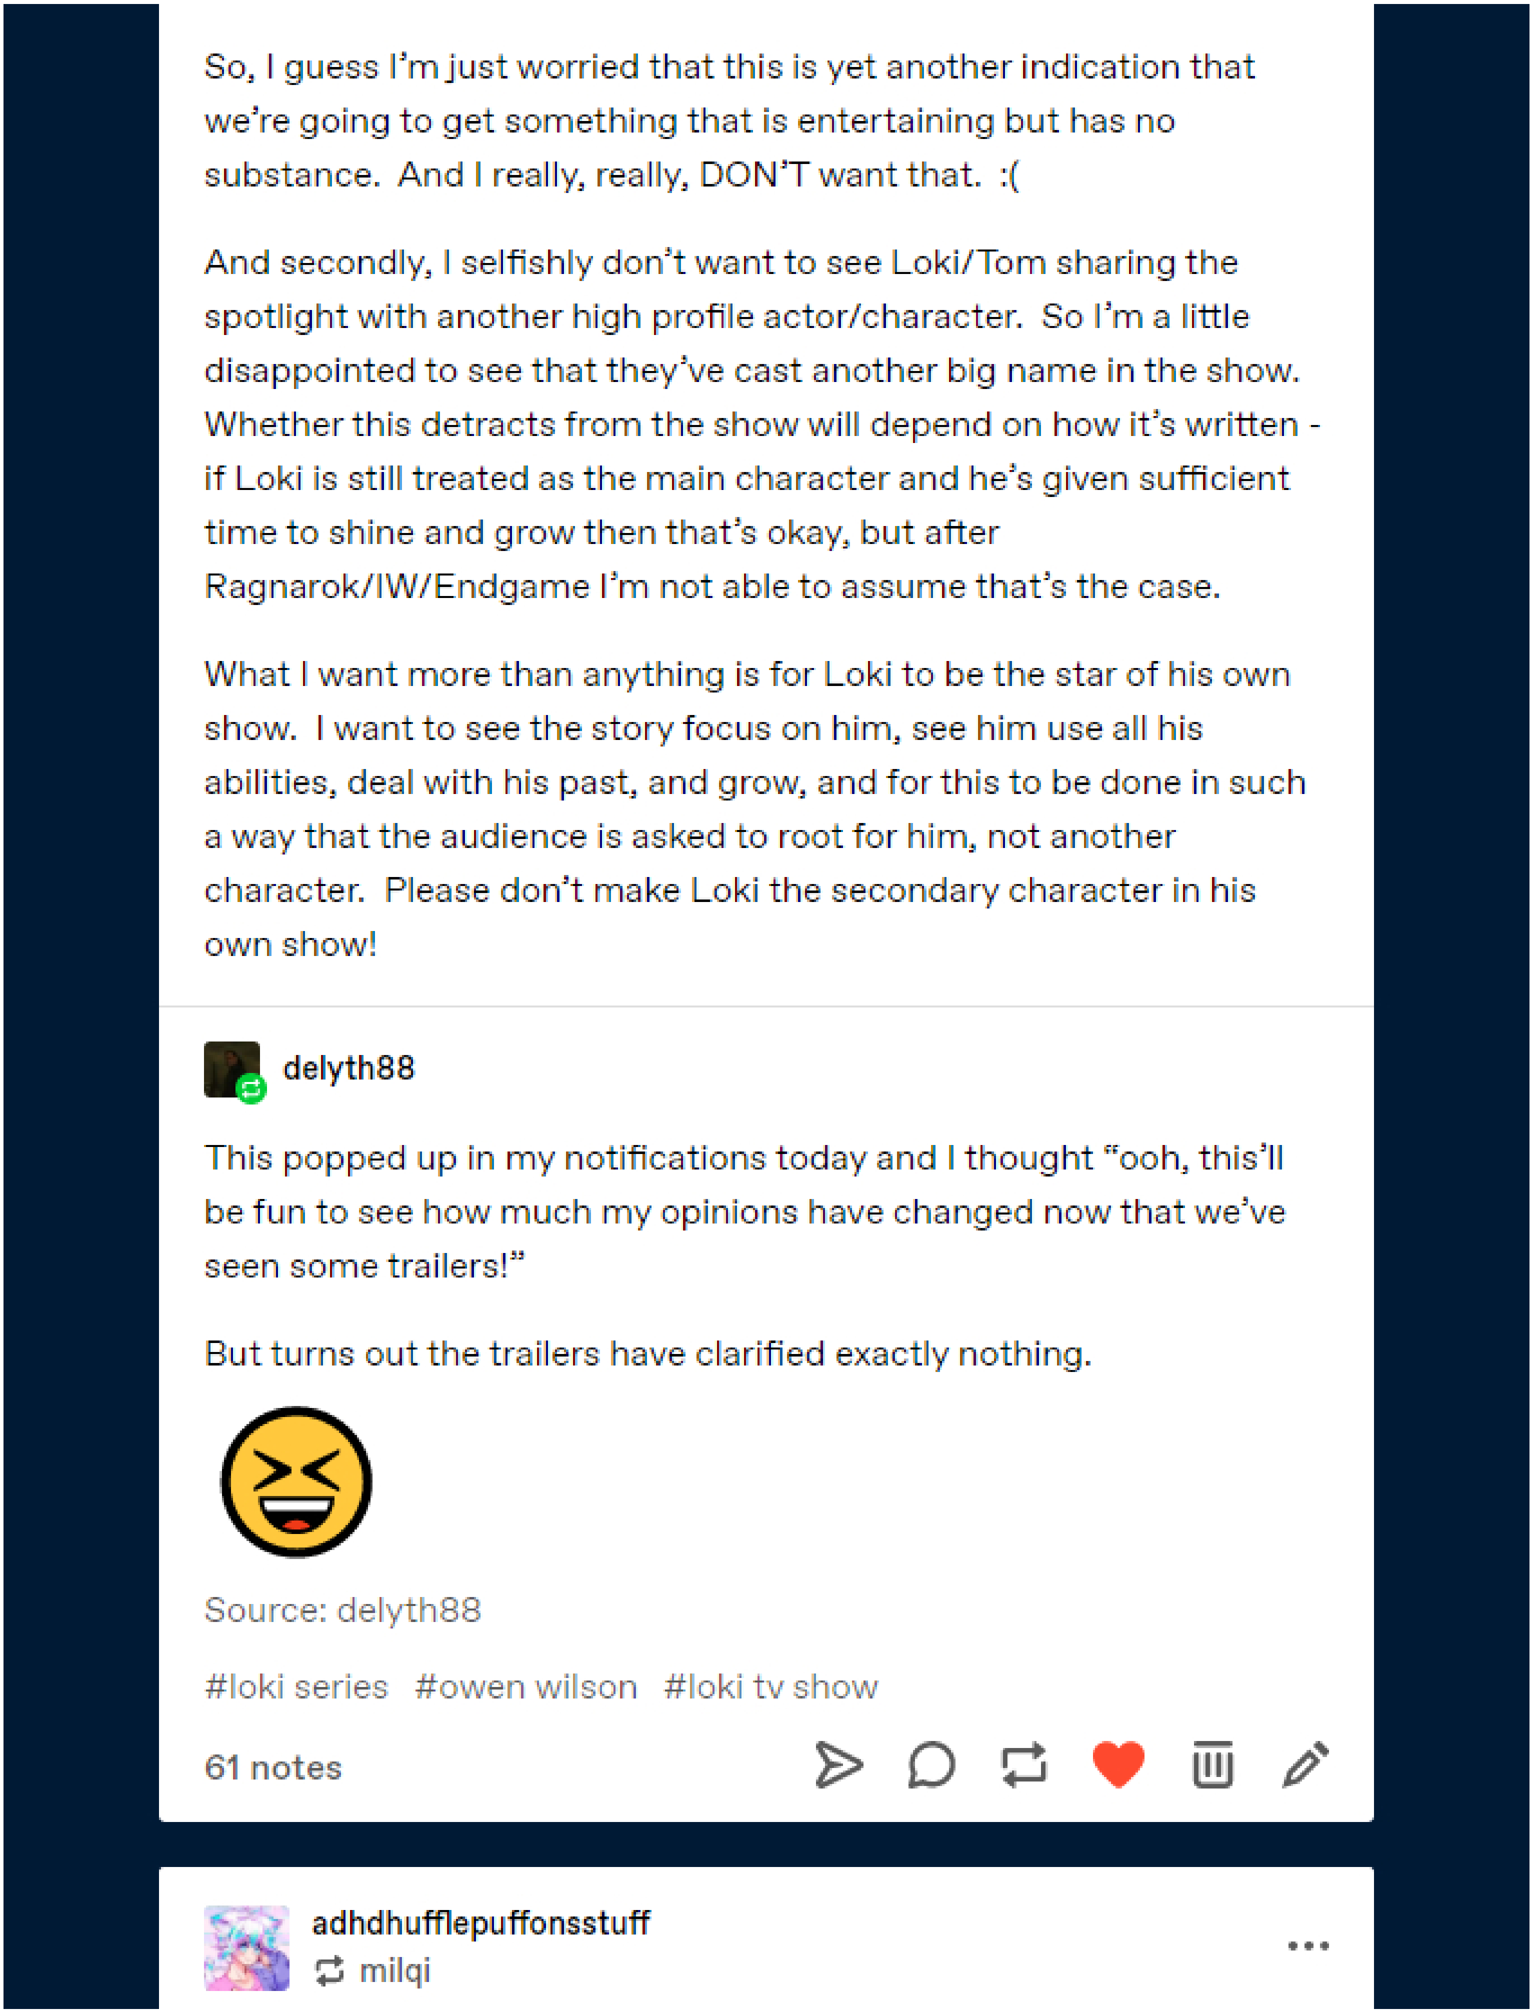
Hmmm… so we're getting Owen Wilson in the Loki series.

If you wan't to steer clear of conversations that are full of worries and negativity, please stop reading now.

I don't particularly dislike Owen Wilson, but the things I've seen him in before all have a comedic tone that doesn't really do it for me. Moderately enjoyable in the moment but just a bit silly really. And this is not what I am hoping we'll get for the series. As I've said before, a bit of comedy would be great, but of the sort that lets the characters retain their dignity and leans more towards the witty remark than the pratfall.



So, I guess I'm just worried that this is yet another indication that we're going to get something that is entertaining but has no substance. And I really, really, DON'T want that. :(

And secondly, I selfishly don't want to see Loki/Tom sharing the spotlight with another high profile actor/character. So I'm a little disappointed to see that they've cast another big name in the show. Whether this detracts from the show will depend on how it's written - if Loki is still treated as the main character and he's given sufficient time to shine and grow then that's okay, but after Ragnarok/IW/Endgame I'm not able to assume that's the case.

What I want more than anything is for Loki to be the star of his own show. I want to see the story focus on him, see him use all his abilities, deal with his past, and grow, and for this to be done in such a way that the audience is asked to root for him, not another character. Please don't make Loki the secondary character in his own show!

This popped up in my notifications today and I thought "ooh, this'll be fun to see how much my opinions have changed now that we've seen some trailers!"

But turns out the trailers have clarified exactly nothing.

Does you post contain flashing lights, heavy glitching, or anything else that is likely to cause a seizure from looking at it?

Tag it with flashing lights

Does your post warn about one of the above in a movie or video or tv show or game without including visual examples that would make the post fall into the above category?

Tag it with epilepsy

In summary: is it important for us to see it? Tag it with epilepsy. Is it important that we DONT see it? Tag it with flashing lights.

Hmm a Polish man who grew up in post-WWII Poland wrote a series in which the people of the northern kingdoms are being invaded, slaughtered, and oppressed by an imperialistic southern kingdom, and the northern people then express their rage and hopelessness by scapegoating local minorities in waves of violence that the author quite literally calls pogroms.

Huh I wonder if there's a message or political allegory or something in there.

No, I just can't think of one.

oooh have you ever done a post about the ridiculous mandatory twist endings in old sci-fi and horror comics? Like when the guy at the end would be like "I saved the Earth from Martians because I am in fact a Vensuvian who has sworn to protect our sister planet!" with no build up whatsoever with no build up whatsoever.

vintagegeekculture answered:

Yeah, that is a good question - why do some scifi twist endings fail?

As a teenager obsessed with Rod Serling and the Twilight Zone, I bought every single one of Rod Serling's guides to writing. I wanted to know what he knew.

The reason that Rod Serling's twist endings work is because they "answer the question" that the story raised in the first place. They are connected to the very clear reason to even tell the story at all. Rod's story structures were all about starting off with a question, the way he did in his script for Planet of the Apes (yes, Rod Serling wrote the script for Planet of the Apes, which makes sense, since it feels like a Twilight Zone episode): "is mankind inherently violent and self-destructive?" The plot of Planet of the Apes argues the point back and forth, and finally, we get an answer to the question: the Planet of the Apes was earth, after we destroyed ourselves. The reason the ending has "oomph" is because it answers the question that the story asked.

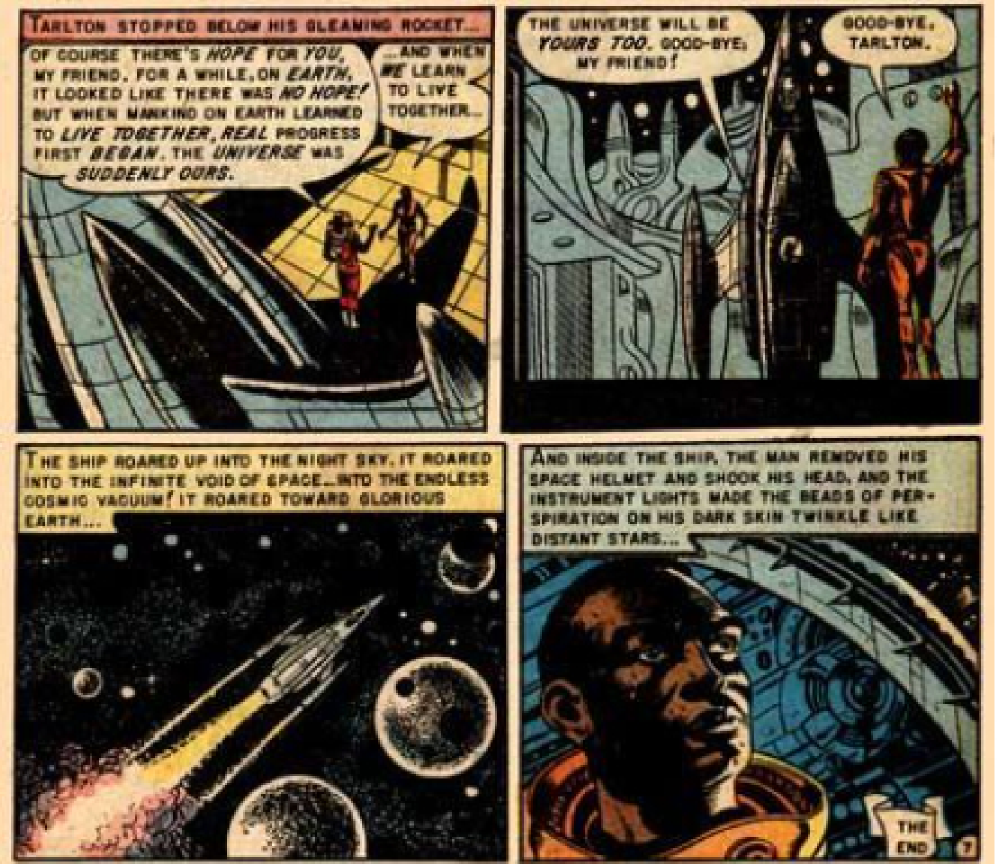
My friend and fellow Rod Serling fan Brian McDonald wrote an article about this where he explains everything beautifully. Check it out. His articles are all worth reading and he's one of the most intelligent guys I've run into if you want to know how to be a better writer.

According to Rod Serling, every story has three parts: proposal, argument, and conclusion. Proposal is where you express the idea the story will go over, like, "are humans violent and self destructive?" Argument is where the characters go back and forth on this, and conclusion is where you answer the question the story raised in a definitive and clear fashion.

HARLEY BROWN

The reason that a lot of twist endings like those of M. Night Shyamalan's and a lot of the 1950s horror comics fail is that they're just a thing that happens instead of being connected to the theme of the story.

One of the most effective and memorable "final panels" in old scifi comics is EC Comics' "Judgment Day," where an astronaut from an enlightened earth visits a backward planet divided between orange and blue robots, where one group has more rights than the other. The point of the story is "is prejudice permanent, and will things ever get better?" And in the final panel, the astronaut from earth takes his helmet off and reveals he is a black man, answering the question the story raised.



TARLTON STOPPED BELOW HIS GLEAMING ROCKET...
OF COURSE THERE'S HOPE FOR YOU, MY FRIEND. FOR A WHILE, ON EARTH, IT LOOKED LIKE THERE WAS NO HOPE! BUT WHEN MANKIND ON EARTH LEARNED TO LIVE TOGETHER, REAL PROGRESS FIRST BEGAN. THE UNIVERSE WAS SUDDENLY OURS.
...AND WHEN WE LEARN TO LIVE TOGETHER...
THE UNIVERSE WILL BE YOURS TOO. GOOD-BYE, MY FRIEND!
GOOD-BYE, TARLTON.
THE SHIP ROARED UP INTO THE NIGHT SKY. IT ROARED INTO THE INFINITE VOID OF SPACE...INTO THE ENDLESS COSMIC VACUUM! IT ROARED TOWARD GLORIOUS EARTH...
AND INSIDE THE SHIP, THE MAN REMOVED HIS SPACE HELMET AND SHOOK HIS HEAD, AND THE INSTRUMENT LIGHTS MADE THE BEADS OF PERSPIRATION ON HIS DARK SKIN TWINKLE LIKE DISTANT STARS...
THE END

Something I find incredibly cool is that they've found neandertal bone tools made from polished rib bones, and they couldn't figure out what they were for for the life of them.

Until, of course, they showed it to a traditional leatherworker and she took one look at it and said "Oh yeah sure that's a leather burnisher, you use it to close the pores of leather and work oil into the hide to make it waterproof. Mine looks just the same."

"Wait you're still using the exact same fucking thing 50,000 years later???"

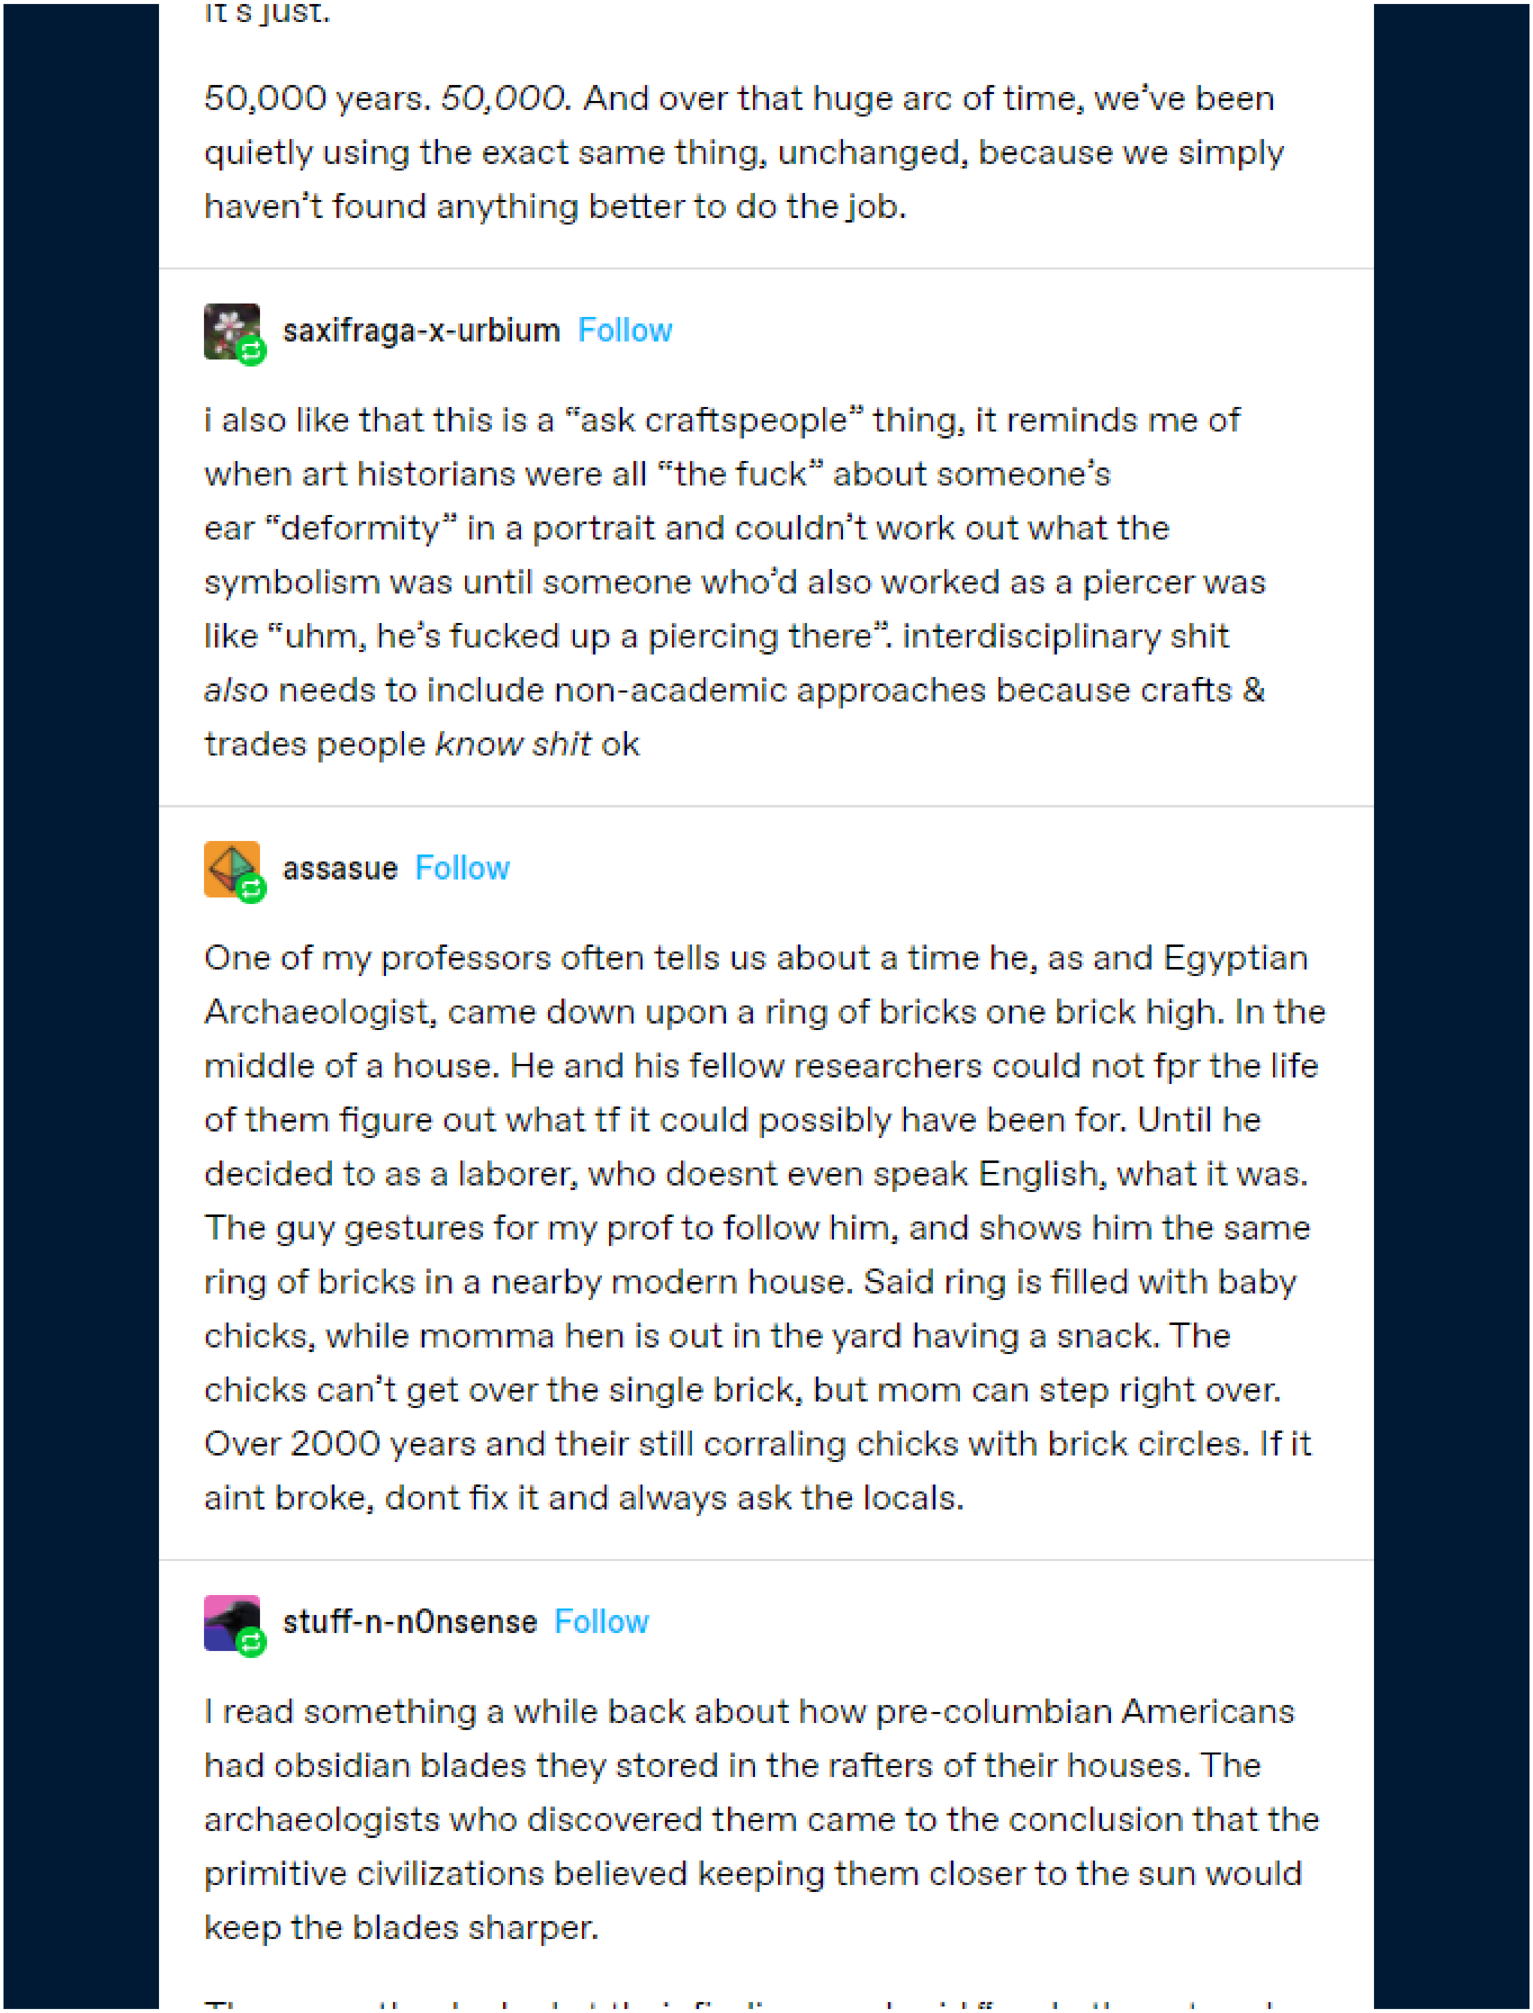
"Well, yeah. We've tried other things. Metal scratches up and damages the hide. Wood splinters and wears out. Bone lasts forever and gives the best polish. There are new, cheaper plastic ones, but they crack and break after a couple years. A bone polisher is nearly indestructible, and only gets better with age. The more you use a bone polisher the better it works."



it's just.

50,000 years. 50,000. And over that huge arc of time, we've been quietly using the exact same thing, unchanged, because we simply haven't found anything better to do the job.

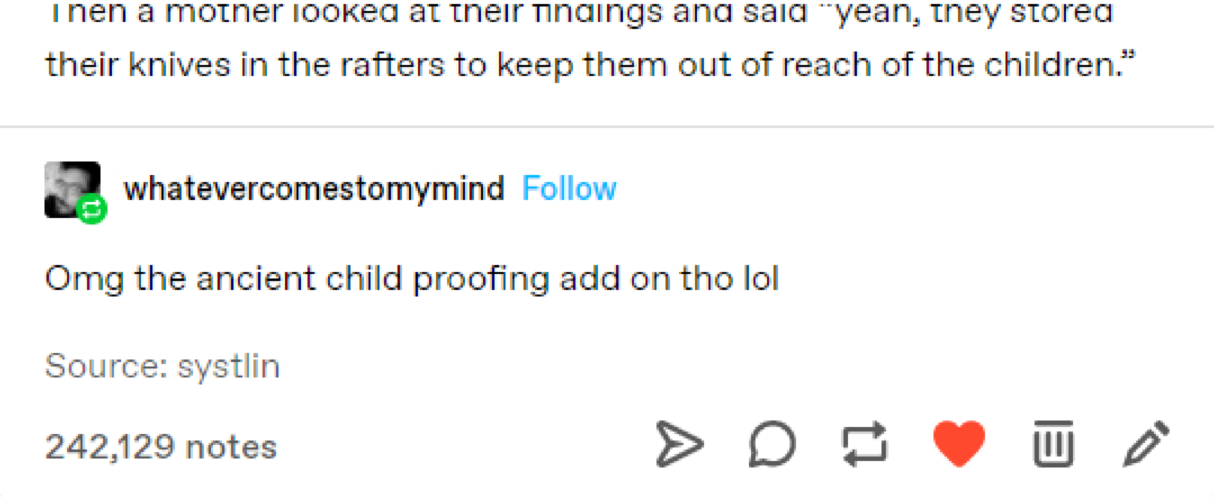
The guy gestures for my prof to follow him, and shows him the same ring of bricks in a nearby modern house. Said ring is filled with baby chicks, while momma hen is out in the yard having a snack. I read something a while back about how pre-columbian Americans had obsidian blades they stored in the rafters of their houses. The archaeologists who discovered them came to the conclusion that the primitive civilizations believed keeping them closer to the sun would keep the blades sharper.



Then a mother looked at their findings and said "yeah, they stored their knives in the rafters to keep them out of reach of the children."

doberbutts Follow

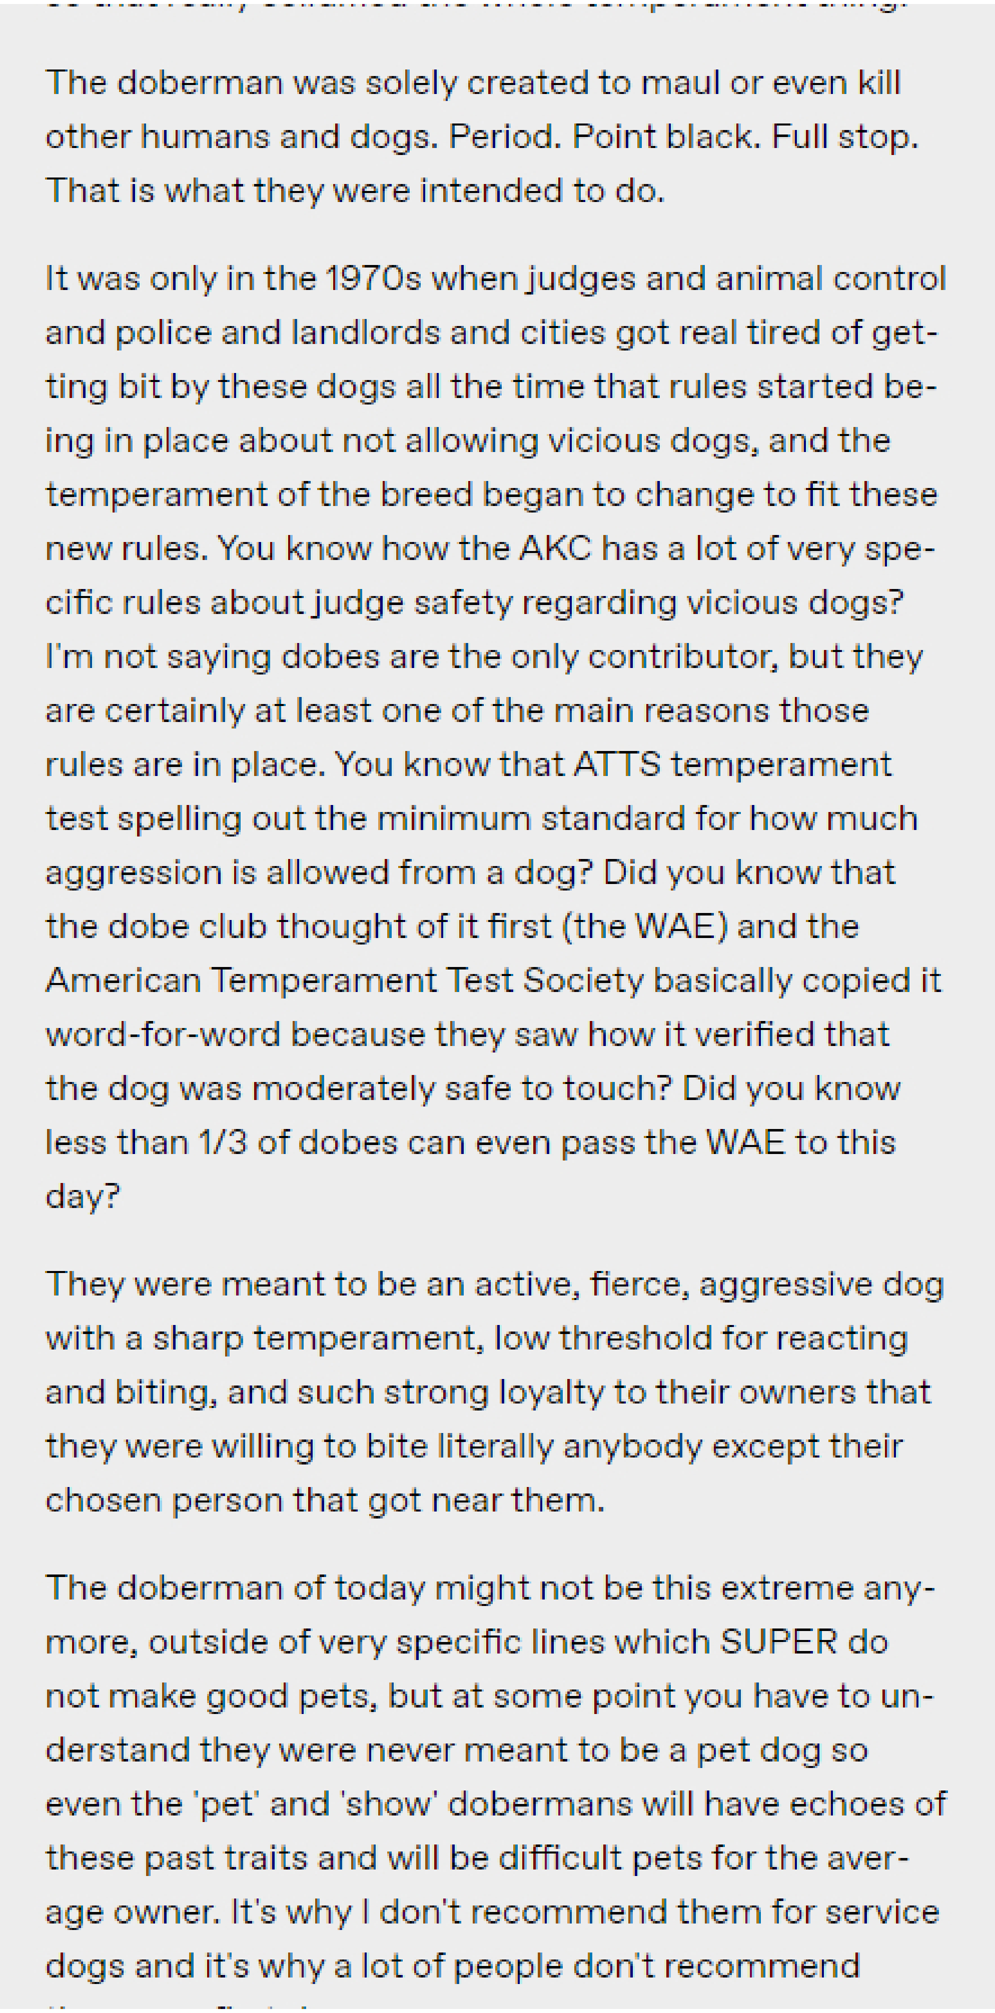
Anonymous asked:

Do you really think dobermans make bad pets? What do you mean by that as someone who loves the breed?

doberbutts answered:

The doberman was created to be a personal protection dog first and foremost, to bite without hesitation or logic, to be completely untouchable by everyone except their owner, and to be so vicious that they were completely unmanageable to the point where they could 'strike fear in the devil himself'.

Not surprisingly, a dog that matches that description does pretty poorly in today's world, but also in fairness they WERE Nazi dogs very quickly after their creation so that really solidified the whole temperament thing.



The doberman was solely created to maul or even kill other humans and dogs. Period. Point black. Full stop. That is what they were intended to do.

It was only in the 1970s when judges and animal control and police and landlords and cities got real tired of getting bit by these dogs all the time that rules started being in place about not allowing vicious dogs, and the temperament of the breed began to change to fit these new rules. You know how the AKC has a lot of very specific rules about judge safety regarding vicious dogs? I'm not saying dobes are the only contributor, but they are certainly at least one of the main reasons those rules are in place. You know that ATTS temperament test spelling out the minimum standard for how much aggression is allowed from a dog? Did you know that the dobe club thought of it first (the WAE) and the American Temperament Test Society basically copied it word-for-word because they saw how it verified that the dog was moderately safe to touch? Did you know less than 1/3 of dobes can even pass the WAE to this day?

They were meant to be an active, fierce, aggressive dog with a sharp temperament, low threshold for reacting and biting, and such strong loyalty to their owners that they were willing to bite literally anybody except their chosen person that got near them.

The doberman of today might not be this extreme anymore, outside of very specific lines which SUPER do not make good pets, but at some point you have to understand they were never meant to be a pet dog so even the 'pet' and 'show' dobermans will have echoes of these past traits and will be difficult pets for the average owner. It's why I don't recommend them for service dogs and it's why a lot of people don't recommend them as a first dog.

I've seen it work, clearly, obviously. I've also seen it not work. It works when the owner recognizes that they have a doberman. It doesn't work when the owner tries to change their doberman into something distinctly not-doberman.

It's no wonder the breed struggles with the temperament issues it does today. Back then, those were good traits we were selecting for. Now we're trying to get rid of them, and because there's nowhere really for those traits to go, all we're doing is creating a bunch of fear biters and shitters and anxiety-ridden messes whenever we try to get rid of the exact traits that make a doberman, well, a doberman.

Native English speakers are the world's worst communicators

In a room full of non-native speakers, 'there isn't any chance of understanding'. It might be their language, but the message is...

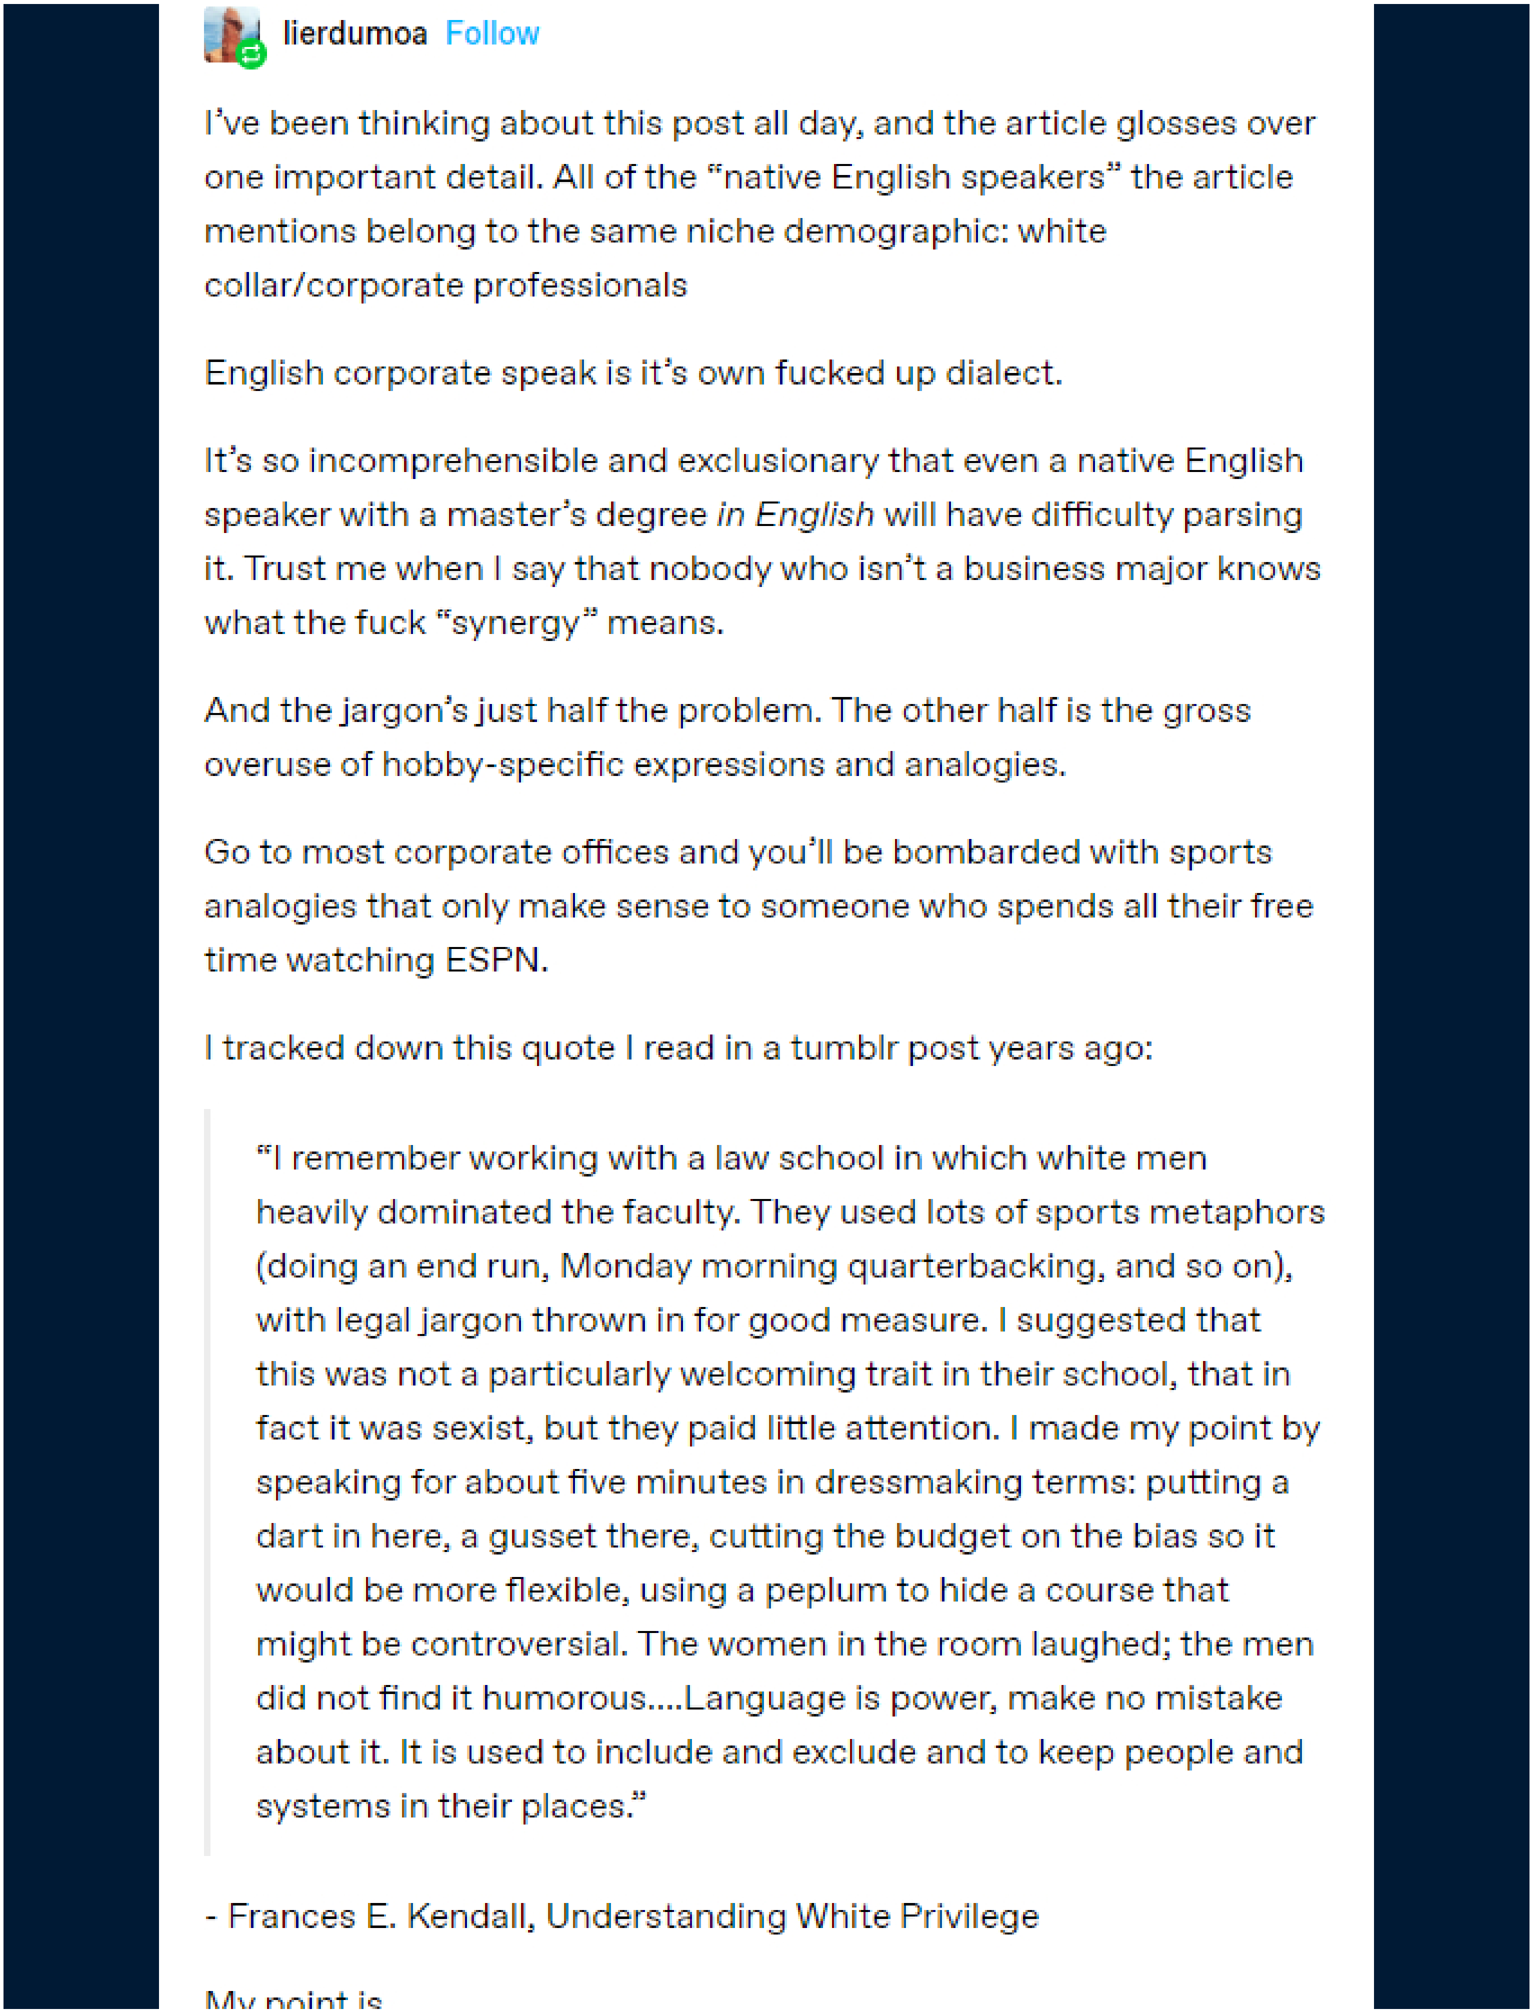
WWW.BBC.COM | LENNOX MORRISON

"A lot of native speakers are happy that English has become the world's global language. They feel they don't have to spend time learning another language," says Chong.

"But... often you have a boardroom full of people from different countries communicating in English and all understanding each other and then suddenly the American or Brit walks into the room and nobody can understand them."

The non-native speakers, it turns out, speak more purposefully and carefully, typical of someone speaking a second or third language. Anglophones, on the other hand, often talk too fast for others to follow, and use jokes, slang and references specific to their own culture, says Chong. In emails, they use baffling abbreviations such as 'OOO', instead of simply saying that they will be out of the office.

"The native English speaker... is the only one who might not feel the need to accommodate or adapt to the others," she adds.



I’ve been thinking about this post all day, and the article glosses over one important detail. All of the “native English speakers” the article mentions belong to the same niche demographic: white collar/corporate professionals

English corporate speak is it’s own fucked up dialect.

It’s so incomprehensible and exclusionary that even a native English speaker with a master’s degree in English will have difficulty parsing it. Trust me when I say that nobody who isn’t a business major knows what the fuck “synergy” means.

And the jargon’s just half the problem. The other half is the gross overuse of hobby-specific expressions and analogies.

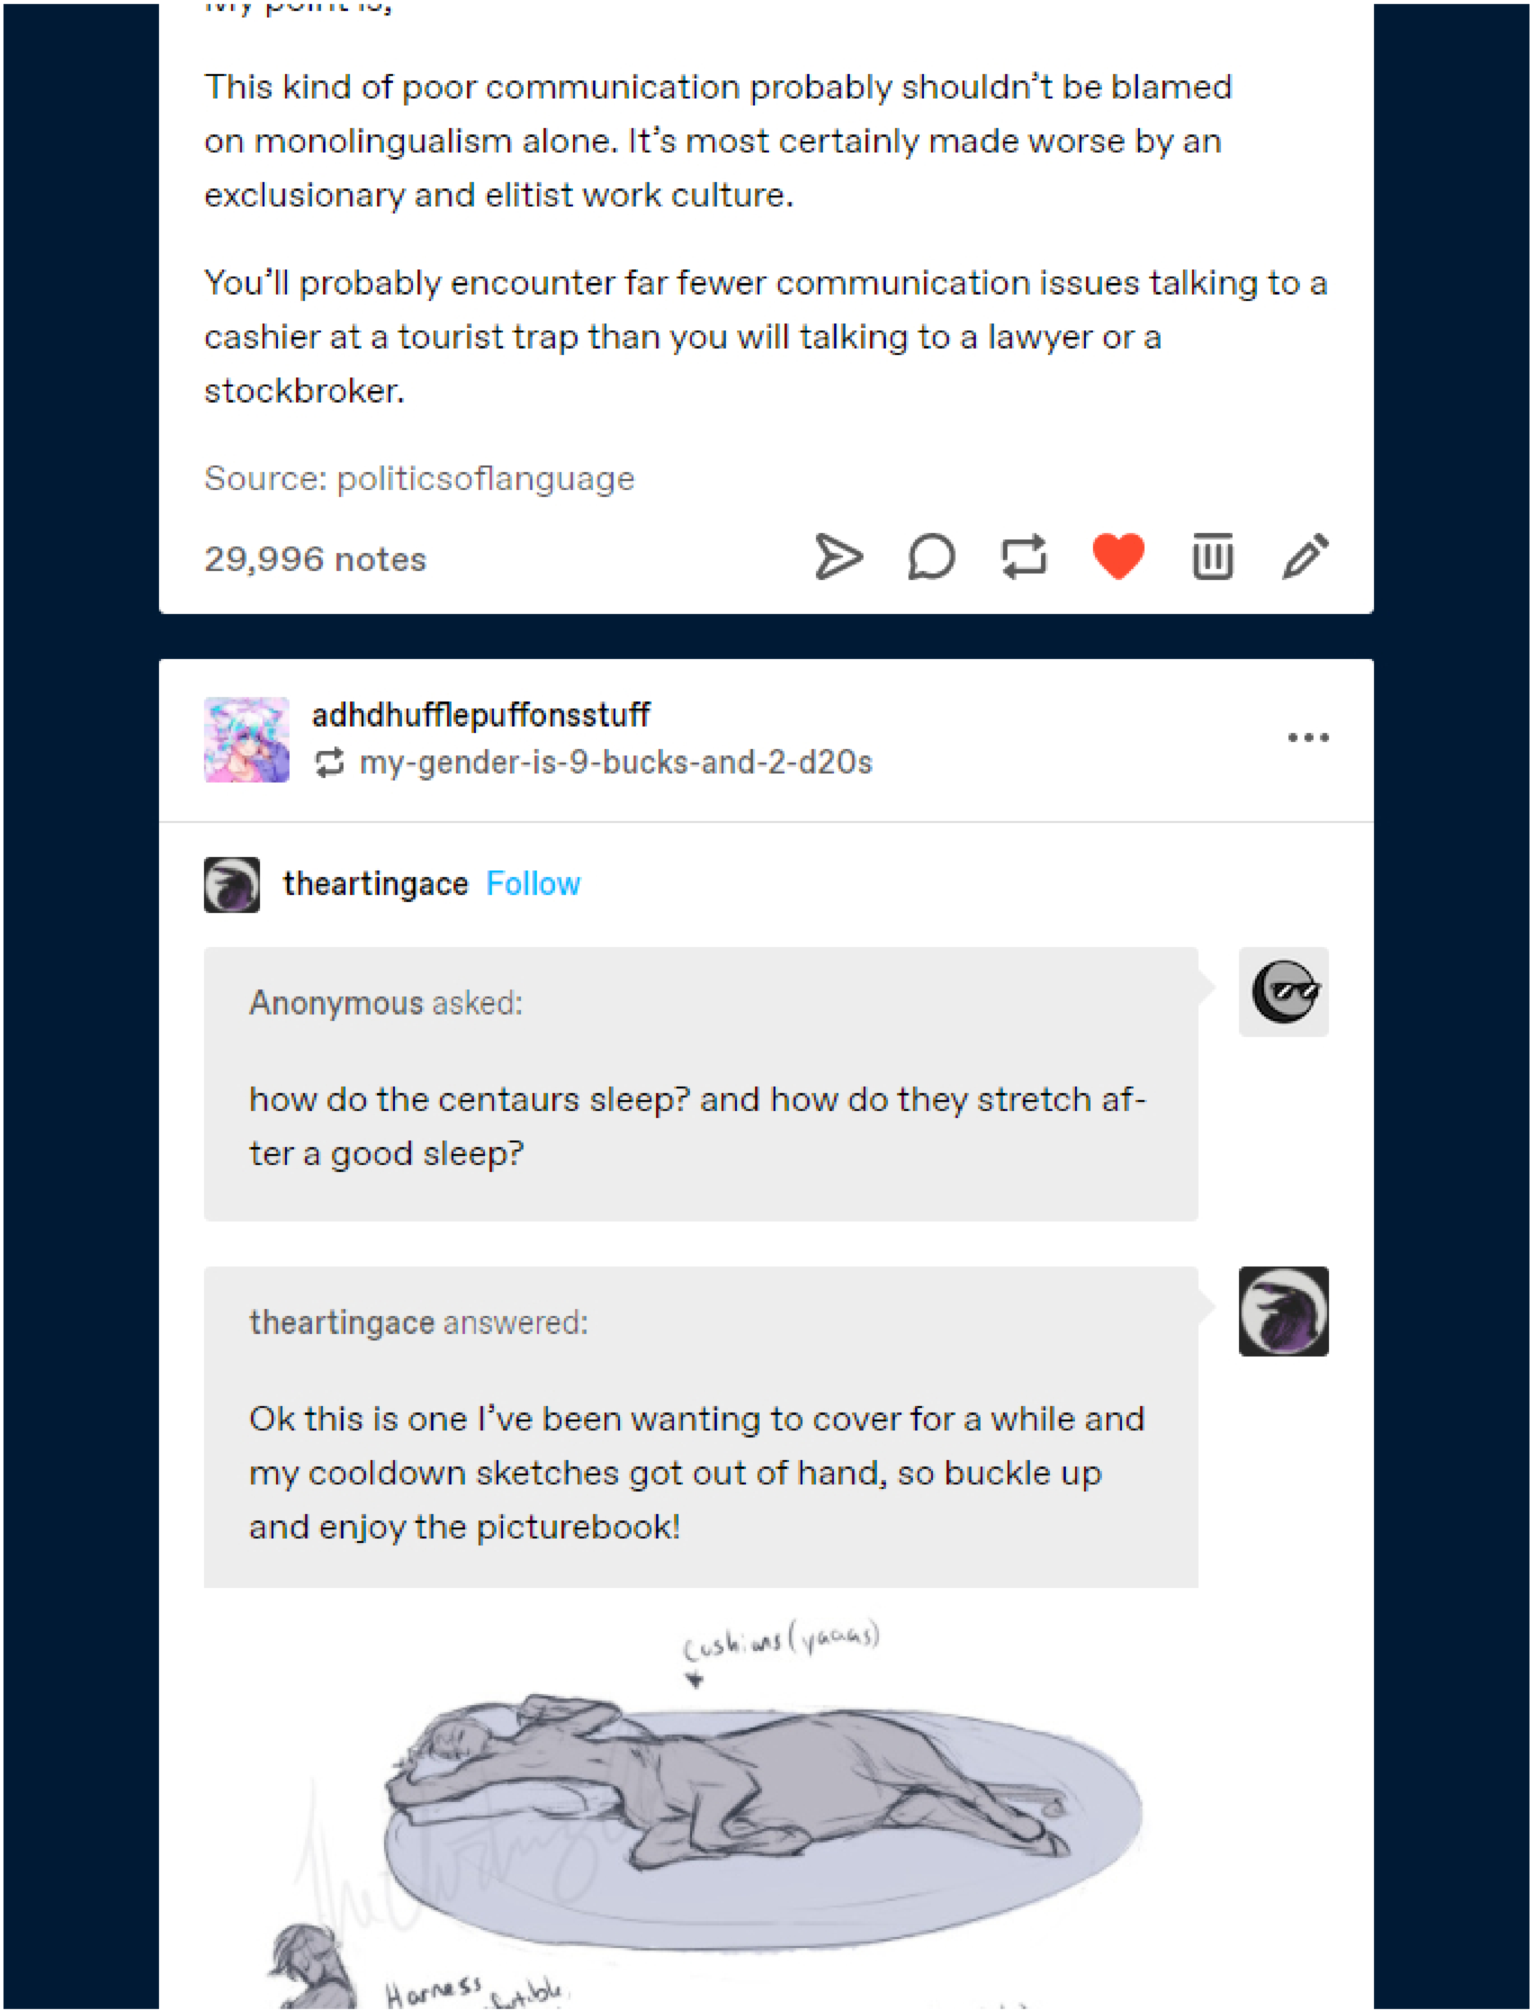
Go to most corporate offices and you’ll be bombarded with sports analogies that only make sense to someone who spends all their free time watching ESPN.

I tracked down this quote I read in a tumblr post years ago:

> “I remember working with a law school in which white men heavily dominated the faculty. They used lots of sports metaphors (doing an end run, Monday morning quarterbacking, and so on), with legal jargon thrown in for good measure. I suggested that this was not a particularly welcoming trait in their school, that in fact it was sexist, but they paid little attention. I made my point by speaking for about five minutes in dressmaking terms: putting a dart in here, a gusset there, cutting the budget on the bias so it would be more flexible, using a peplum to hide a course that might be controversial. The women in the room laughed; the men did not find it humorous….Language is power, make no mistake about it. It is used to include and exclude and to keep people and systems in their places.”

- Frances E. Kendall, Understanding White Privilege

My point is



My point is,

This kind of poor communication probably shouldn't be blamed on monolingualism alone. It's most certainly made worse by an exclusionary and elitist work culture.

You'll probably encounter far fewer communication issues talking to a cashier at a tourist trap than you will talking to a lawyer or a stockbroker.

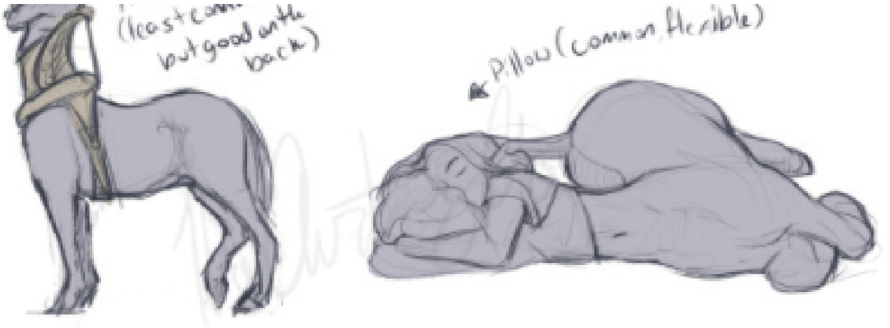
how do the centaurs sleep? and how do they stretch after a good sleep?

theartingace answered:

Ok this is one I've been wanting to cover for a while and my cooldown sketches got out of hand, so buckle up and enjoy the picturebook!



(least comm
but good on the
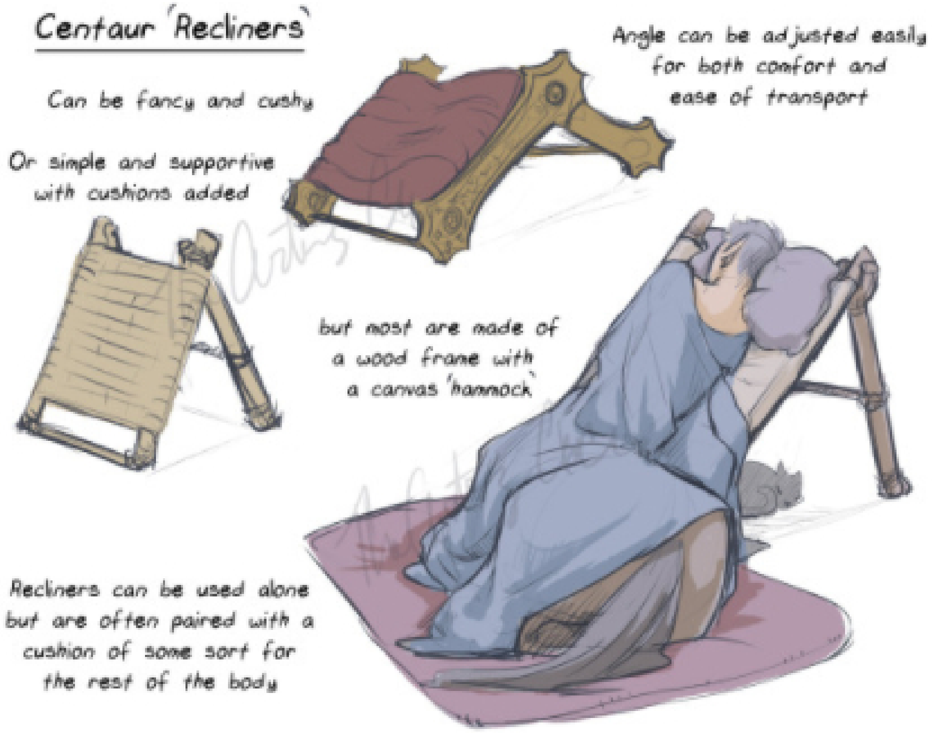
Pillow (common, flexible)

The easiest options is exactly what you think, the flop. In a home, thick carpets or tatami-like mats would provide at least some sort of cushion for the horse-half and various sized cushions and pillows to lift and support the top half. And they CAN sleep standing up, like horses, but it does require both a special harness/corset and practice. And it's not very comfortable for anything deeper than a doze or catnap for most, so it's mostly reserved for bad situations, naps, or guard duty.



Centaur 'Recliners'
Can be fancy and cushy
Angle can be adjusted easily for both comfort and ease of transport
Or simple and supportive with cushions added but most are made of a wood frame with a canvas 'hammock'
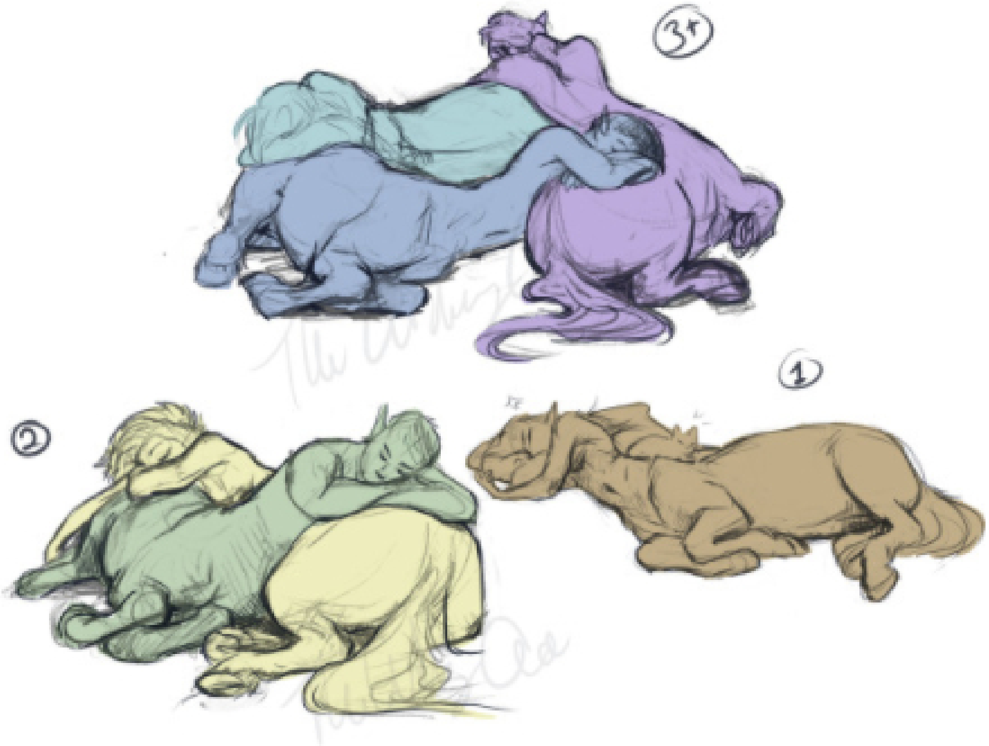
Recliners can be used alone but are often paired with a cushion of some sort for the rest of the body

Most common are recliners, or 'hammocks'. Easy to fold and carry for cultures on the move, or make fancy for the city-folk they are probably the most ubiquitous of centaur furniture. A simple adjustable A-frame supporting some sort of flexible fabric-ish sheet for the top half to lean against and sleep. Usually paired with some sort of large blanket or padding on the ground to lay the horse-half on!



When you don’t have no fancy recliners, your herd will do! The preferred sleeping method of closely bonded herds is to simply rest on your buddies cushy backside! Roaming bands can often form long chains of sleeping centaurs with the unlucky first taur either on guard duty, sleeping sprawled, or with the group’s only hammock.

Mix and match to your character and herd’s personal preference!

Also stretchies!

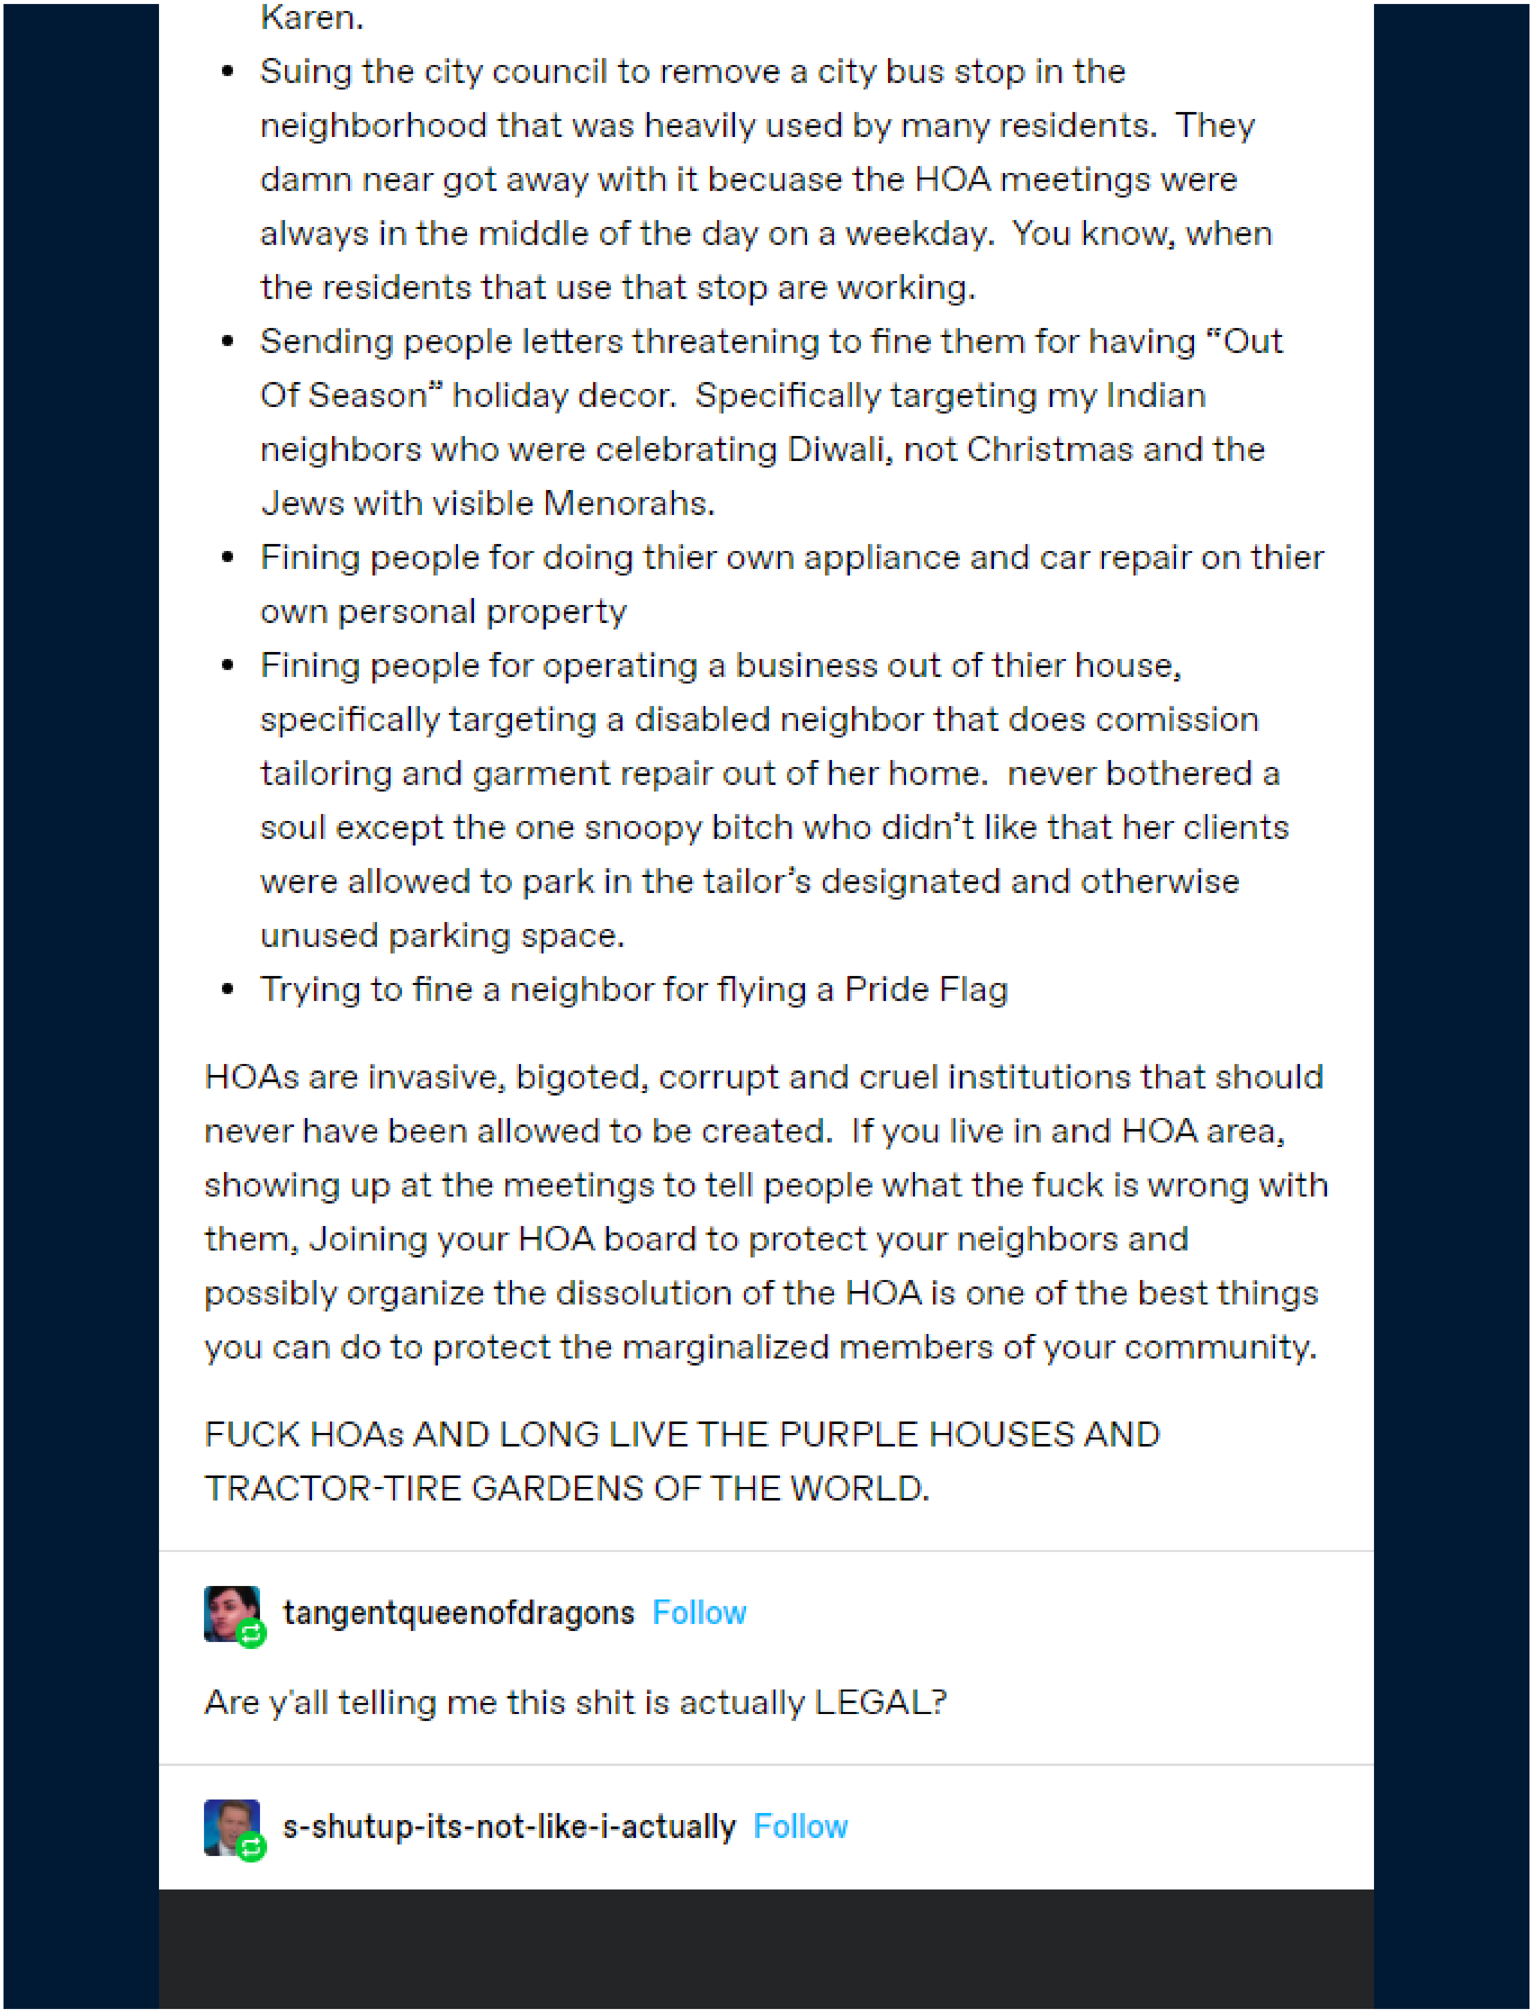
Related, becuase I just had to move: "just don't move into an HOA" Do you know what a PAIN IN THE ASS it is to find NON-HOA Housing? Very nearly everything in the CO front range that isn't a rental has an HOA these days!

Short list of the Shit the HOA at my pervious house tried to pull:

- Banning personal and community food gardens (The reason the tag for my garden is "The garden of earthly HOA violations")
- Banning people from using thier personal yards as Native Plant Restoration microzones, something that looks gorgeous and is extremely helpful to the local ecology
- trying to get the city council to remove protections on adjacent city Open Space/Native Plant restoration zone so they could mow it.
- mandating the use of ONE landscaping company in the neighborhood, coinicdentally owned by the HOA president's son
- Mandating the use of an unecessary water purification company on all properties.
- suing city animal control for collecting lose dogs and cats and returning them to the addresses on thier collars. You know. that thing animal control does so the animals don't get run over or disemboweled by the coyotes or catch and spread rabies. The thing that's illegal to let your pet do out here for those reasons



Karen.

- Suing the city council to remove a city bus stop in the neighborhood that was heavily used by many residents. They damn near got away with it becuase the HOA meetings were always in the middle of the day on a weekday. You know, when the residents that use that stop are working.
- Sending people letters threatening to fine them for having "Out Of Season" holiday decor. Specifically targeting my Indian neighbors who were celebrating Diwali, not Christmas and the Jews with visible Menorahs.
- Fining people for doing thier own appliance and car repair on thier own personal property
- Fining people for operating a business out of thier house, specifically targeting a disabled neighbor that does comission tailoring and garment repair out of her home. never bothered a soul except the one snoopy bitch who didn't like that her clients were allowed to park in the tailor's designated and otherwise unused parking space.
- Trying to fine a neighbor for flying a Pride Flag

HOAs are invasive, bigoted, corrupt and cruel institutions that should never have been allowed to be created. If you live in and HOA area, showing up at the meetings to tell people what the fuck is wrong with them, Joining your HOA board to protect your neighbors and possibly organize the dissolution of the HOA is one of the best things you can do to protect the marginalized members of your community.

FUCK HOAs AND LONG LIVE THE PURPLE HOUSES AND TRACTOR-TIRE GARDENS OF THE WORLD.

Here's the best piece of advice when dealing with an HOA. If they ever start giving you trouble, just threaten to put up a radio tower in your backyard. Like let's say you just got a trampoline for your kids to enjoy and your HOA tells you that you have to take it down. Send them a letter back saying "Okay, but with all of the extra room I'll have in my yard, I'm planning to install a 40ft HAM radio tower. Due to the HAM Radio Parity Act, as well as the Local Community Radio Act, both issued by the FCC, it is entirely within my legal rights to install infrastructure on my property that aids in the use of private and public radio communications. The FCC's jurisdictions take precedence over local and community policy, and a fine of up to $300,000 can be charged towards any entity that attempts to impede on my right to install this tower. Because I don't have the space for both, I was very split on whether I wanted a trampoline or a 40ft steel tower in my yard, but if I'm not allowed to have a trampoline due to this HOA's guidelines, then I suppose it's an easy decision. If there's any input or concerns you have on my decision, please don't hesitate to contact me ". This is basically the easiest way to tell your HOA to fuck off and leave you alone. Best part is that if they try to call your bluff, you can apply with the FCC to get the construction of a HAM radio tower subsidized. They have absolutely no power or authority to stop you, so they'll let just about anything slide if it means their property values don't plummet as a result.

Here's how to get an HOA to leave you and your purple house tf alone

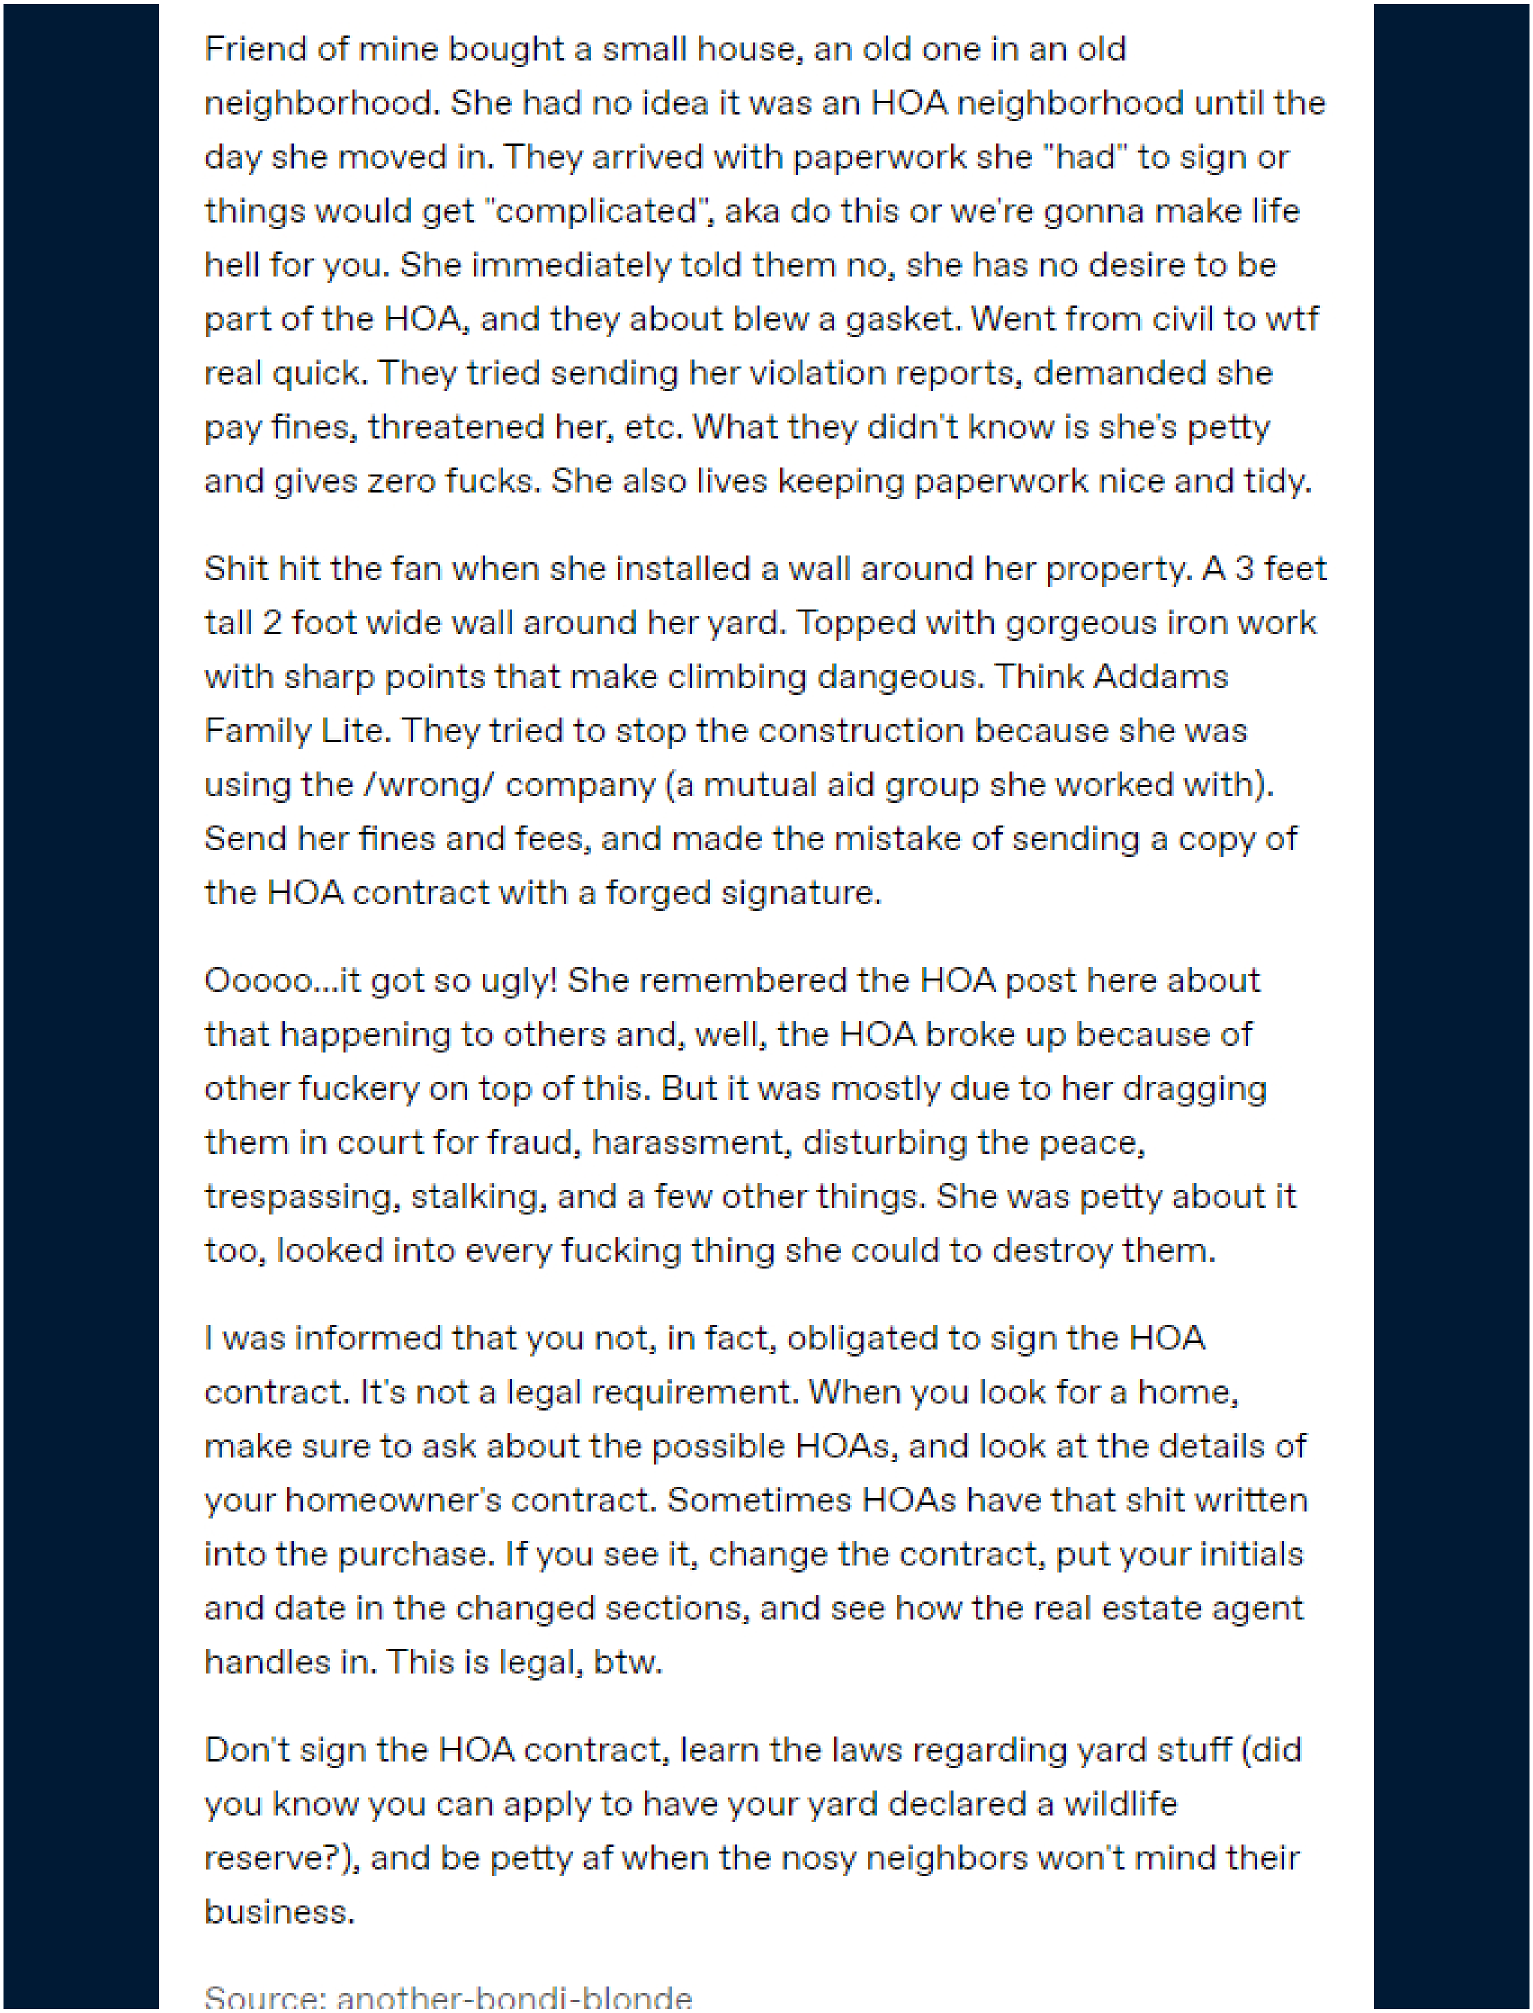
HOAs, IN THEORY, could be such a force for public good, and that's what's maddening. Imagine if an HOA was like "well we've got all these houses and this one empty lot, pay your HOA dues and we can install a community food garden!" or "leave your contact information on the HOA residents-only webpage if you're willing to be an after-school dropoff for children in our community who may not have a parent at home" or "hi, Sally, we've noticed your yard's gone rather hogwild and things weren't like that before your husband passed last year, do you need some help? We have some folks in the HOA who can help you with maintenance, no charge."

Instead they choose isolation over community in the name of a unity that's in image only, and that's really, really sad.

anotherdayforchaosfay Follow



Friend of mine bought a small house, an old one in an old neighborhood. She had no idea it was an HOA neighborhood until the day she moved in. They arrived with paperwork she "had" to sign or things would get "complicated", aka do this or we're gonna make life hell for you. She immediately told them no, she has no desire to be part of the HOA, and they about blew a gasket. Went from civil to wtf real quick. They tried sending her violation reports, demanded she pay fines, threatened her, etc. What they didn't know is she's petty and gives zero fucks. She also lives keeping paperwork nice and tidy.

Shit hit the fan when she installed a wall around her property. A 3 feet tall 2 foot wide wall around her yard. Topped with gorgeous iron work with sharp points that make climbing dangeous. Think Addams Family Lite. They tried to stop the construction because she was using the /wrong/ company (a mutual aid group she worked with). Send her fines and fees, and made the mistake of sending a copy of the HOA contract with a forged signature.

Ooooo...it got so ugly! She remembered the HOA post here about that happening to others and, well, the HOA broke up because of other fuckery on top of this. But it was mostly due to her dragging them in court for fraud, harassment, disturbing the peace, trespassing, stalking, and a few other things. She was petty about it too, looked into every fucking thing she could to destroy them.

I was informed that you not, in fact, obligated to sign the HOA contract. It's not a legal requirement. When you look for a home, make sure to ask about the possible HOAs, and look at the details of your homeowner's contract. Sometimes HOAs have that shit written into the purchase. If you see it, change the contract, put your initials and date in the changed sections, and see how the real estate agent handles in. This is legal, btw.

Don't sign the HOA contract, learn the laws regarding yard stuff (did you know you can apply to have your yard declared a wildlife reserve?), and be petty af when the nosy neighbors won't mind their business.

Dude you know the question you asked what do conservatives get out of supernatural? So yesterday I found out that a friend of mine from high school who is a 22yo white cishet right-leaning Roman Catholic dude who is currently serving in the military watched all 15 seasons of supernatural. Apparently he liked the guns and the fighting and he also felt like Sam and Deans' relationship with each other and with their father reflected a lot of his own experiences growing up with 5 brothers and a military father who was gone more often than not. When he started watching, his fav character was Sam but by the end, that had shifted to Dean although he disliked the fact that Dean was, and this is a direct quote, "such a whore." I asked him if he liked the ending and he said that it was okay, that Dean's death was "bullshit" but that the brothers got to enter heaven together and that's what was most important. I additionally asked him what he thought of Castiel and he said that he thought his character was boring and he disliked it when the show tried to make Cas the center of episodes. He had absolutely no memory of what happened in 15×18 and had to look up the synopsis again to remember that Cas died. *ADDITIONAL FACTS ABOUT MY FRIEND THAT MAKE ALL OF THIS ABSOLUTELY HYSTERICAL: we met through ballet, one of his other favorite shows is Hannibal, he is an absolutely lethal jujitsu fighter, he has no idea what tumblr is, he works on motorcycles and vintage cars for fun which his dad taught him how to do, and when he was 18, after his gf at the time cheated on him, he decided to give up on women and he dated a gay friend of his for 3 months. Apparently he figured out pretty quickly that he was "definitely straight" but he kept dating/having sex with his friend/boyfriend until they both moved away because "he was a genuinely good dude" and he "didn't have to catch so it was fine." Yes he did suck dick. I asked

We didn’t start this war internet users have with ads - We might have moaned about banner ads, but it was only when they started making noises when we might be listening to music or a podcast or whatever, causing two sound sorces at once, that we started trying to block ads universally rather than just a specific type of ad (pop ups).

And since then ads have gotten worse - Actual malware rather than merely breaking one of the fundamental sins of web design - though shalt not autoplay anything with sound. And the more aggressive a website is with 'please turn off adblock' the less I trust it to bother to vet ads and advertisers to make sure they're not installing malware.

Not to mention that the idea that avoiding ads is "freeloading" is hilariously backward. Advertisement is a transaction between the platform and the advertiser, the user has no obligation to provide the views/clicks the platform has promised. Using an adblocker isn't freeloading in the same way that leaving the room to get a snack during a commercial break isn't cheating the tv network.

i'm basck already i think its hilarious when cops cry about people hating them and talk about how hard their job is and how difficult is is to do when they could just........... quit if it's so fucking hard to be a cop, quit. stop making me listen to these sob stories about how mad you are that people want to hold you accountable and quit your job. you don't have to cry about maybe not coming home at night if you work at Subway or something or if you really want to be at risk be a fucking pizza delivery driver because it's far more dangerous anyway

st4n4rchy

Honestly the true irony comes from cop apologisers. The very same people who will tell poor people 'just get another job if you don't like your current one' (often actually important workers, which they don't respect either), will have an absolute meltdown if you give them a taste of their own medicine.

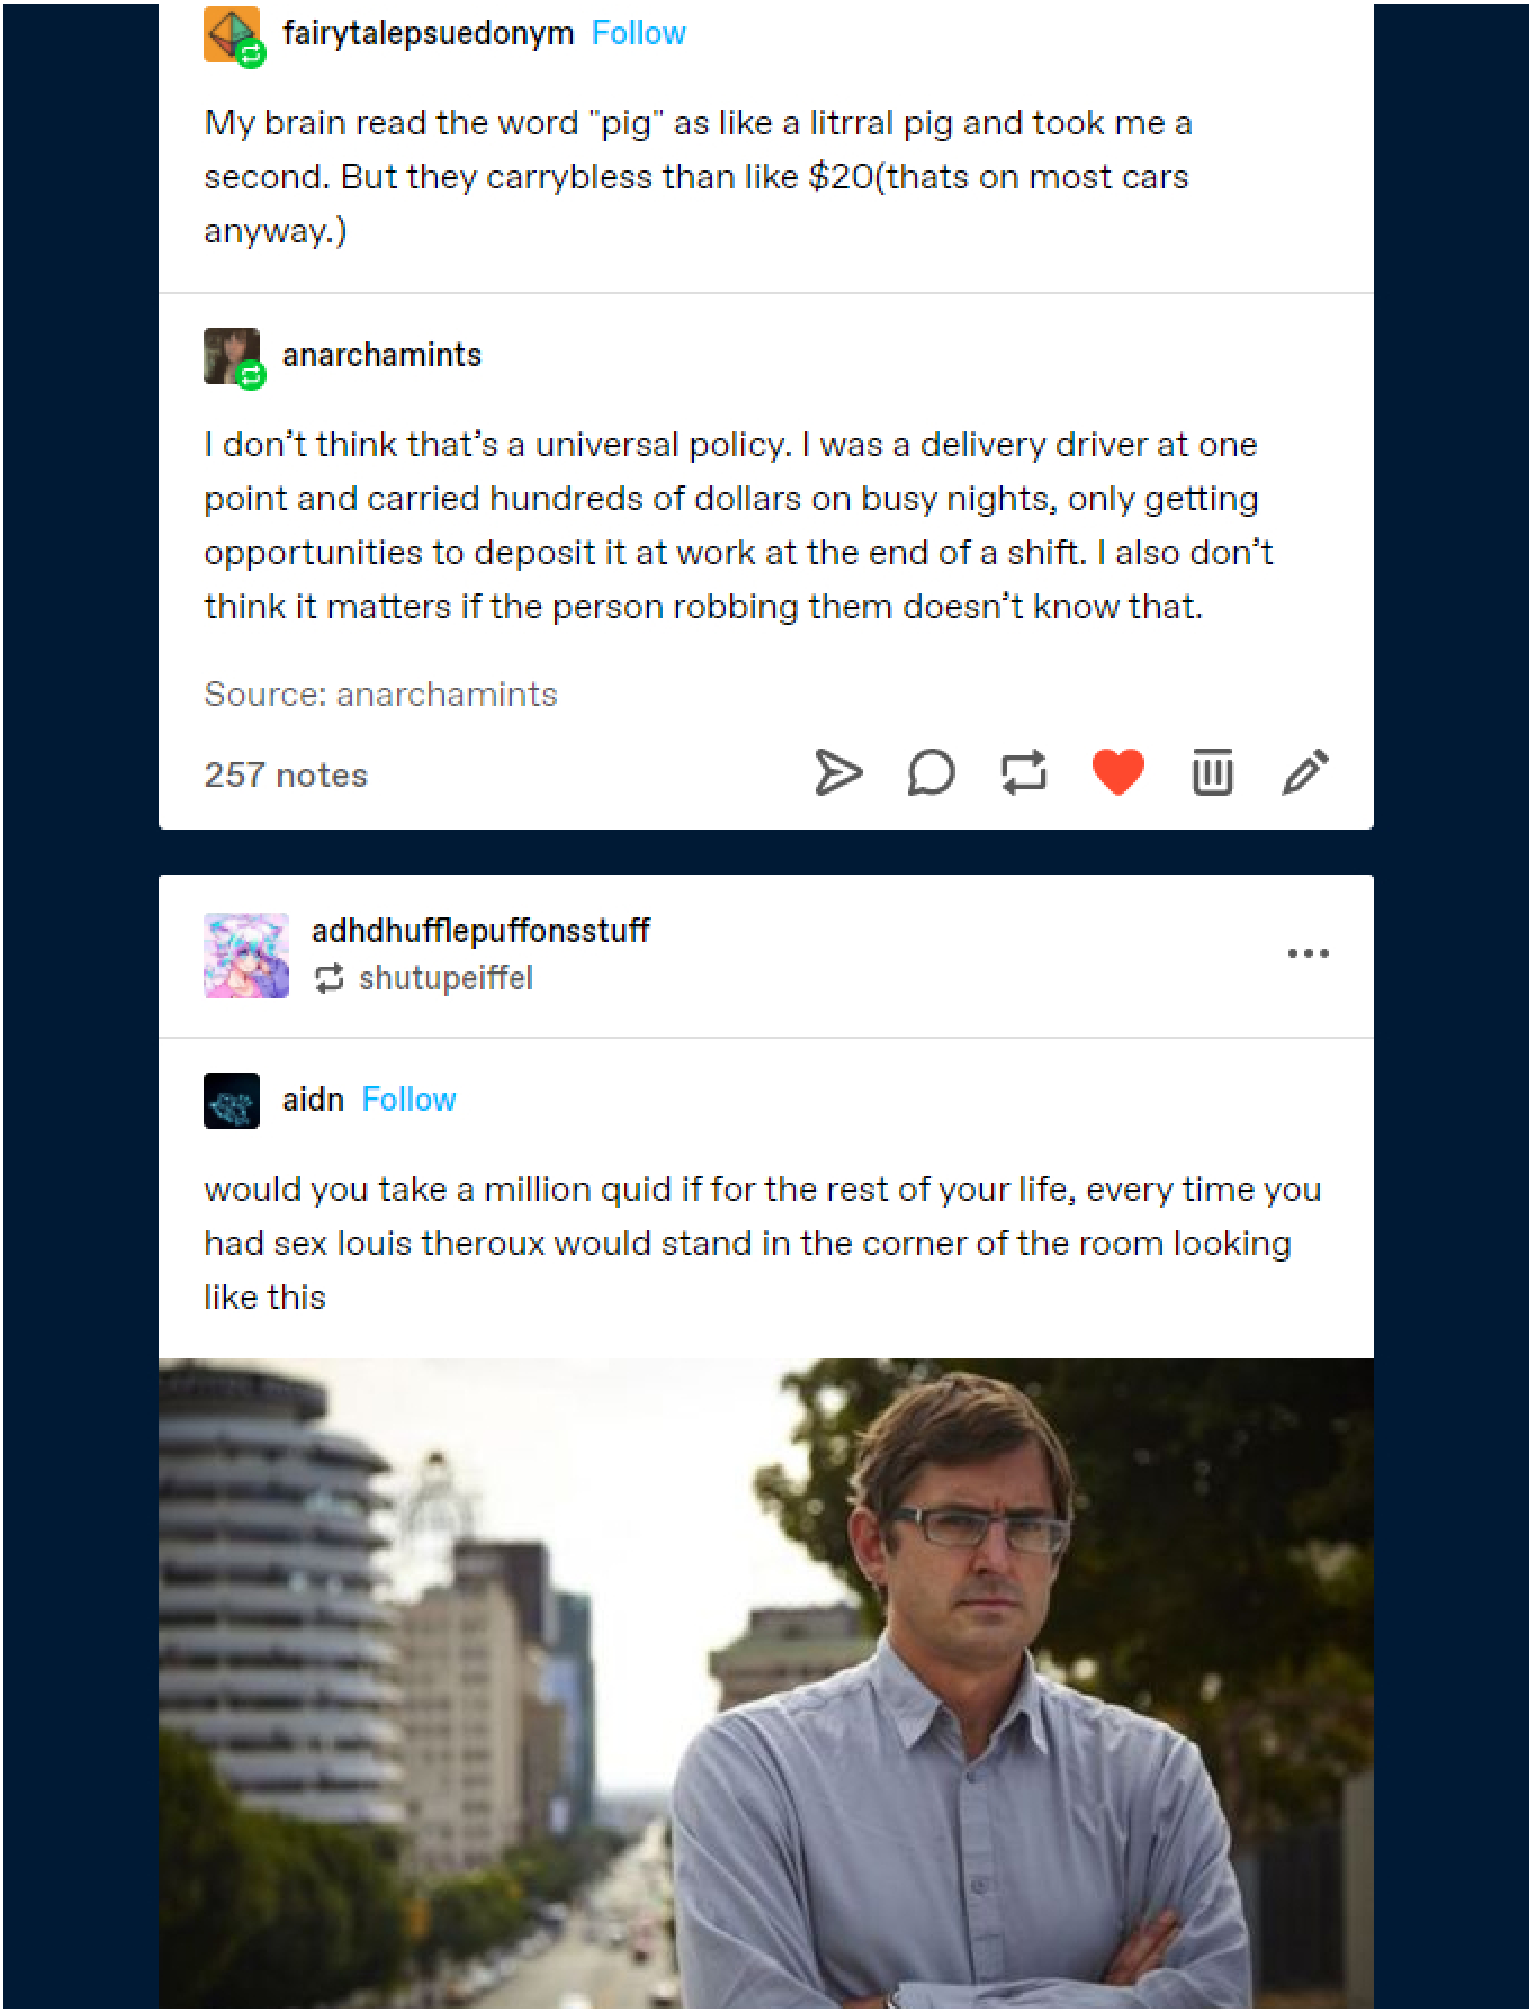
Notbarguing but how is being a pizza delevery driver nore dangerous?

anarchamints

They're targets of robbery all the time because they carry cash. More often than not someone isn't going to pull a gun on a pig but a pizza delivery person?



fairytalepsuedonym

My brain read the word "pig" as like a litrral pig and took me a second. But they carrybless than like $20(thats on most cars anyway.)

anarchamints

I don't think that's a universal policy. I was a delivery driver at one point and carried hundreds of dollars on busy nights, only getting opportunities to deposit it at work at the end of a shift. I also don't think it matters if the person robbing them doesn't know that.

Now, not only has the magazine creation been passed down from generation to generation of high school students, but there's an entire center and foundation for Foxfire.
- What You Are Getting Wrong About Appalachia - don't read Hillbilly Elegy; read this book instead. It genuinely changed my life and my understanding of this nation. This is a "why didn't they teach us THIS in school" book filled with important knowledge, defense of minority groups in Appalachia, dispelling of myths... seriously it's such a good book.
- How Half of America Lost Its Fing Mind - this article is less Appalachia-centric, but it offers a pretty balanced look at why rural counties glowed red in 2016 and 2020 (note: this article was written back in early 2016, when liberals never fully believed Trump would get any votes, but the also liberal author of the article knew more than he thought he did). Again, one of the few articles on the Internet that doesn't use "uneducated" as an insult.

- Gone Home: Race and Roots through Appalachia - this book was filled with interviews from black Americans who grew up in Appalachian coal mining towns. Fair warning, the editing and formatting in this book is fully atrocious, but the information is still insanely valuable!

I hate to talk about something so extremely severe but I just need to say it. I know the whole "why is nobody talking about this" thing is annoying but I really am starting to feel like I'm going insane over the fact that Tennessee recently passed a law (PASSED IT, not suggested it, not considering it, it's FINALIZED) stating that businesses have to put up a WARNING SIGN if they are supportive of transgender people. A public warning sign stating that they allow trans people to use their facilities. And I've seen basically no mainstream acknowledgment of it at all, anywhere. Just other trans people expressing their fear and anger. Can we maybe acknowledge that for like, how deeply horrifying that actually is.

anyway i think it's really funny how this nsfw ban has played itself out. the staff has basically stopped trying to remove the porn and instead just blacklisted certain terms so that you can't search for them, thus meaning that the only way you can see pornographic content is if you are suddenly and unwillingly exposed to it - in short, precisely the thing that the nsfw ban was trying to prevent from happening in the first place. good job, guys

#i was suddenly and unwillingly exposed to porn on tumblr before the nsfw ban though

that's exactly my point! the ban obliterated all the pros of nsfw content (the existence of a somewhat safe/anonymous platform for sex workers to operate from, artists trying to get exposure, regular horny people being horny, etc etc) and kept all the cons (random porn bots following you, untagged porn appearing on your dash). it achieved nothing and in a lot of ways made things actively worse purge of 2002? of 2012? what ARE those?

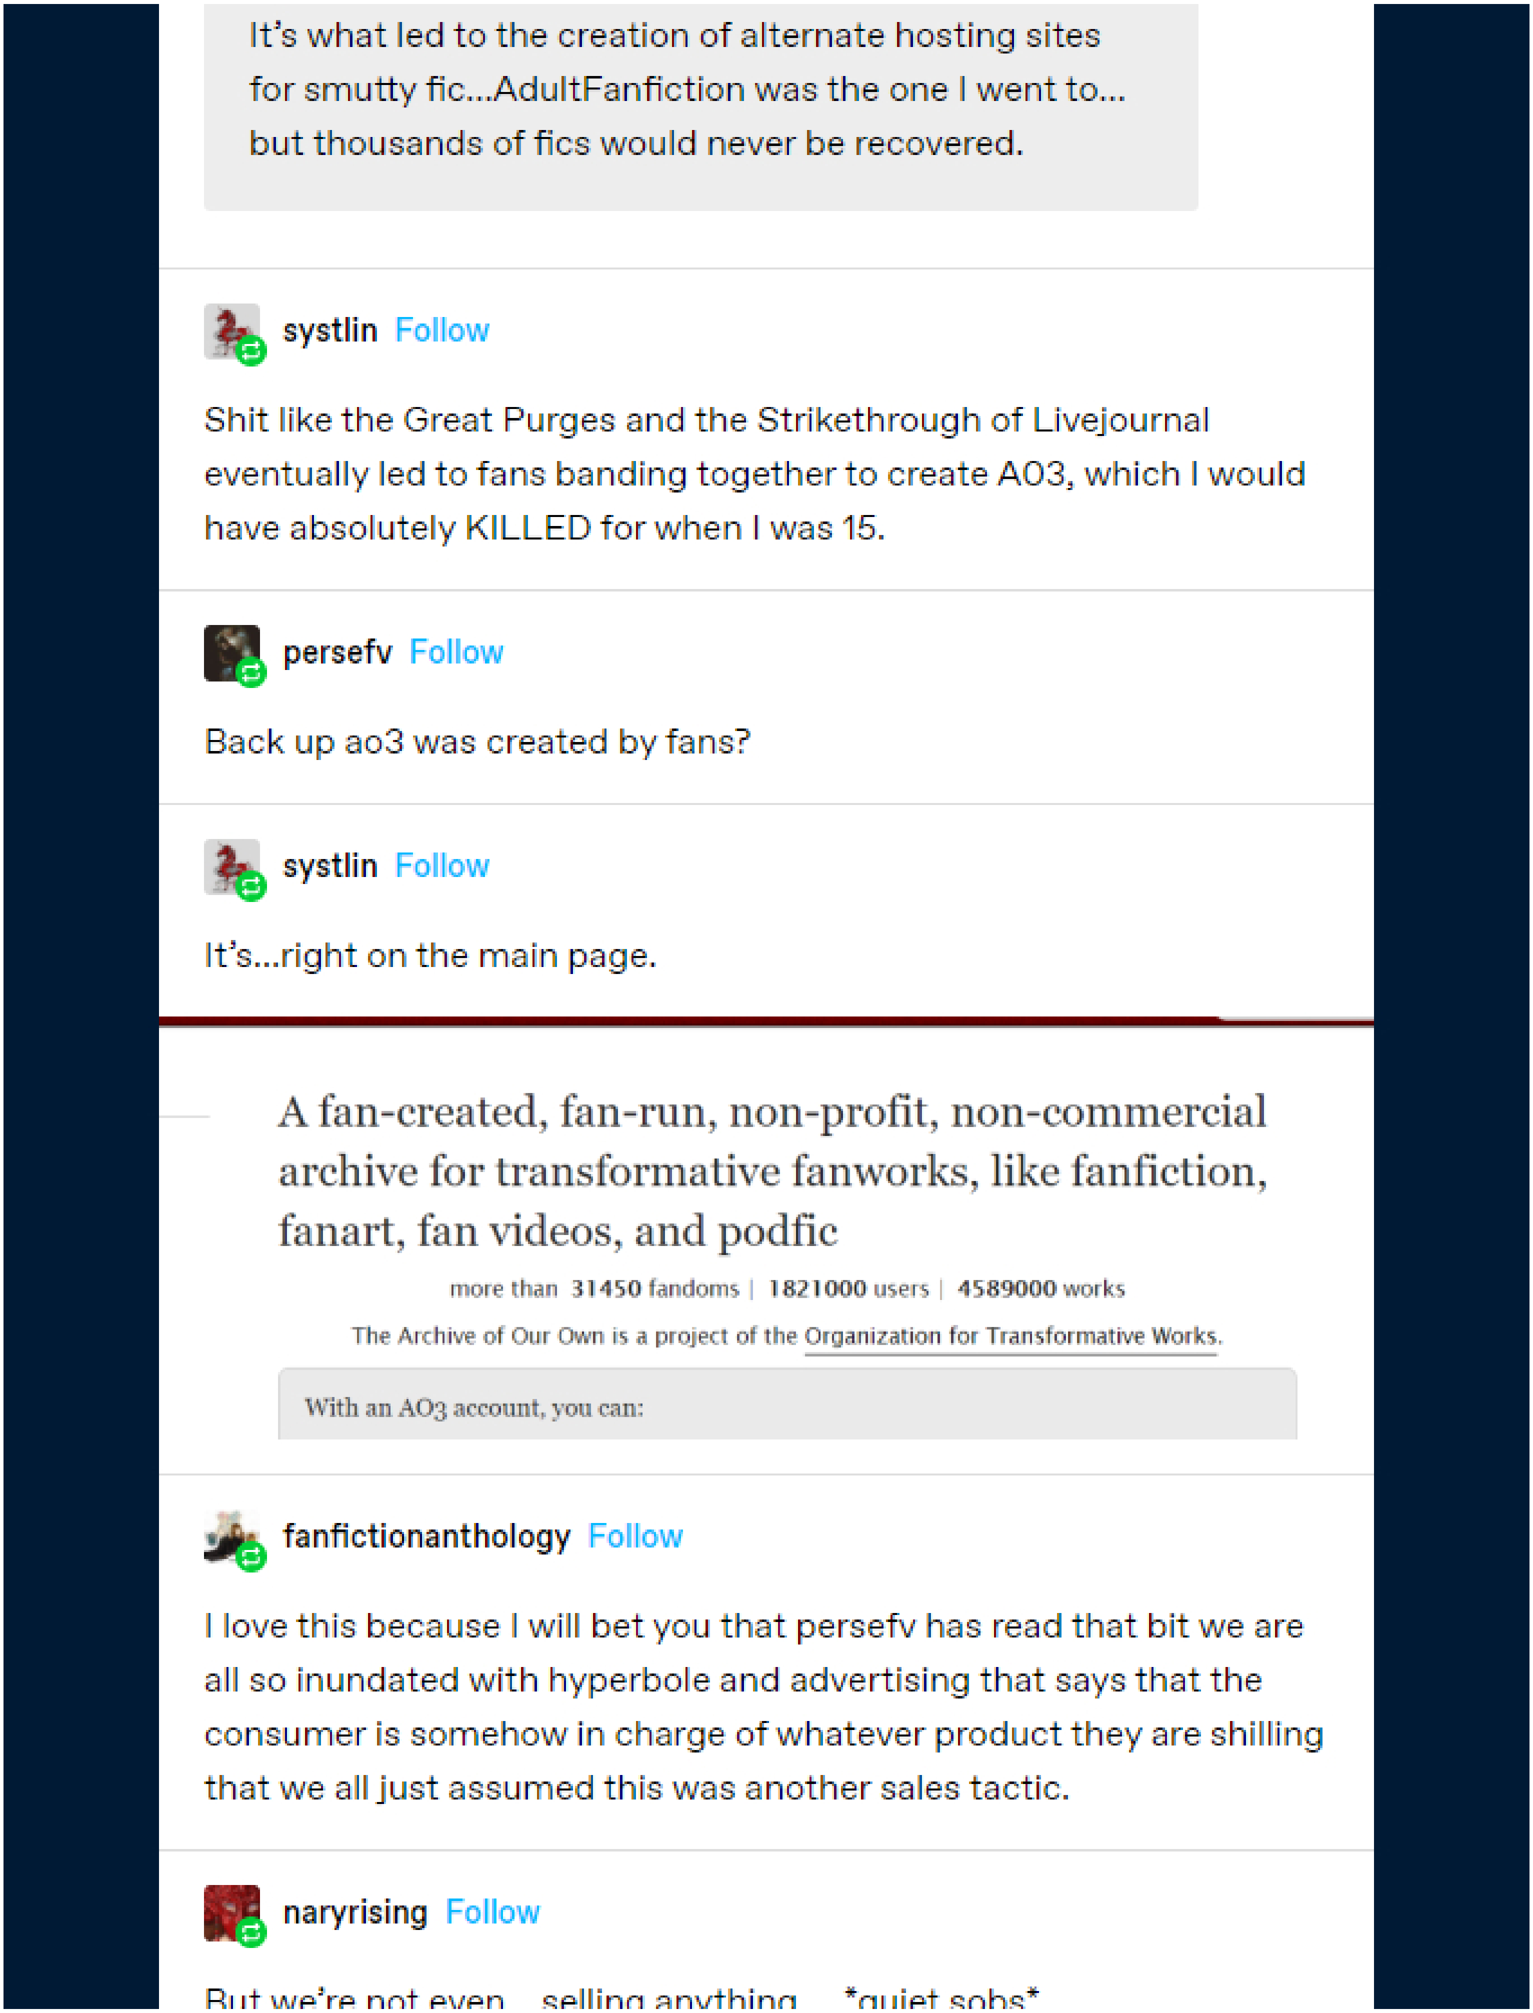
systlin answered:

Oh, how quickly the past is forgotten.

They are part of the reason A03 is a thing now. Not the whole reason, but part of it.

The Great Purges of 2002 and 2012 are when ff.net got a wild hair up their ass about THINK OF THE CHILDREN and nuked any fic posted on there that was explicit. Thousands upon thousands of nc-17 smutfics were lost.



> It’s what led to the creation of alternate hosting sites for smutty fic…AdultFanfiction was the one I went to… but thousands of fics would never be recovered.

Shit like the Great Purges and the Strikethrough of Livejournal eventually led to fans banding together to create AO3, which I would have absolutely KILLED for when I was 15.

DOUBLE FACEPALM

When facepalm just isn't enough.

Is there any way to spread this info?

THE OTW WAS CREATED BY FANS SO WE'D HAVE AN ARCHIVE THAT WASN'T SUBJECT TO CORPORATE REVIEW.

Nonprofit, so that nobody could ever say, "this isn't making enough money; it's getting shut down." (See: Geocities, Quizilla, Figment, G+.) With lawyers involved and a firm awareness of the legalities of fanfic, so nobody would decide "we've gotten a nasty letter from a megacorporation with lawyers, so we're hiding because we can't afford to face a lawsuit. (Jedi Hurtaholics, Trevizo's Millennium site.) With teams, so that an argument between co-mods didn't result in the destruction of a whole archive. (Gryffindor Tower, Detention.)

AO3 IS OUR SITE.

It is by fans, for fans. Fans do all the coding. All the legal paperwork. All the abuse/tos violation complaints. Fans make all the choices about policies. Fans decide how to run the fundraisers. Fans write the blog posts. All the volunteer staff are fans; all the people who train them are fans. Fans wrangle all the tags.

(And the other OTW projects, too. Fans manage the entries at Fanlore. Fans run the Open Doors project. Fans publish Transformative Works and Cultures.)

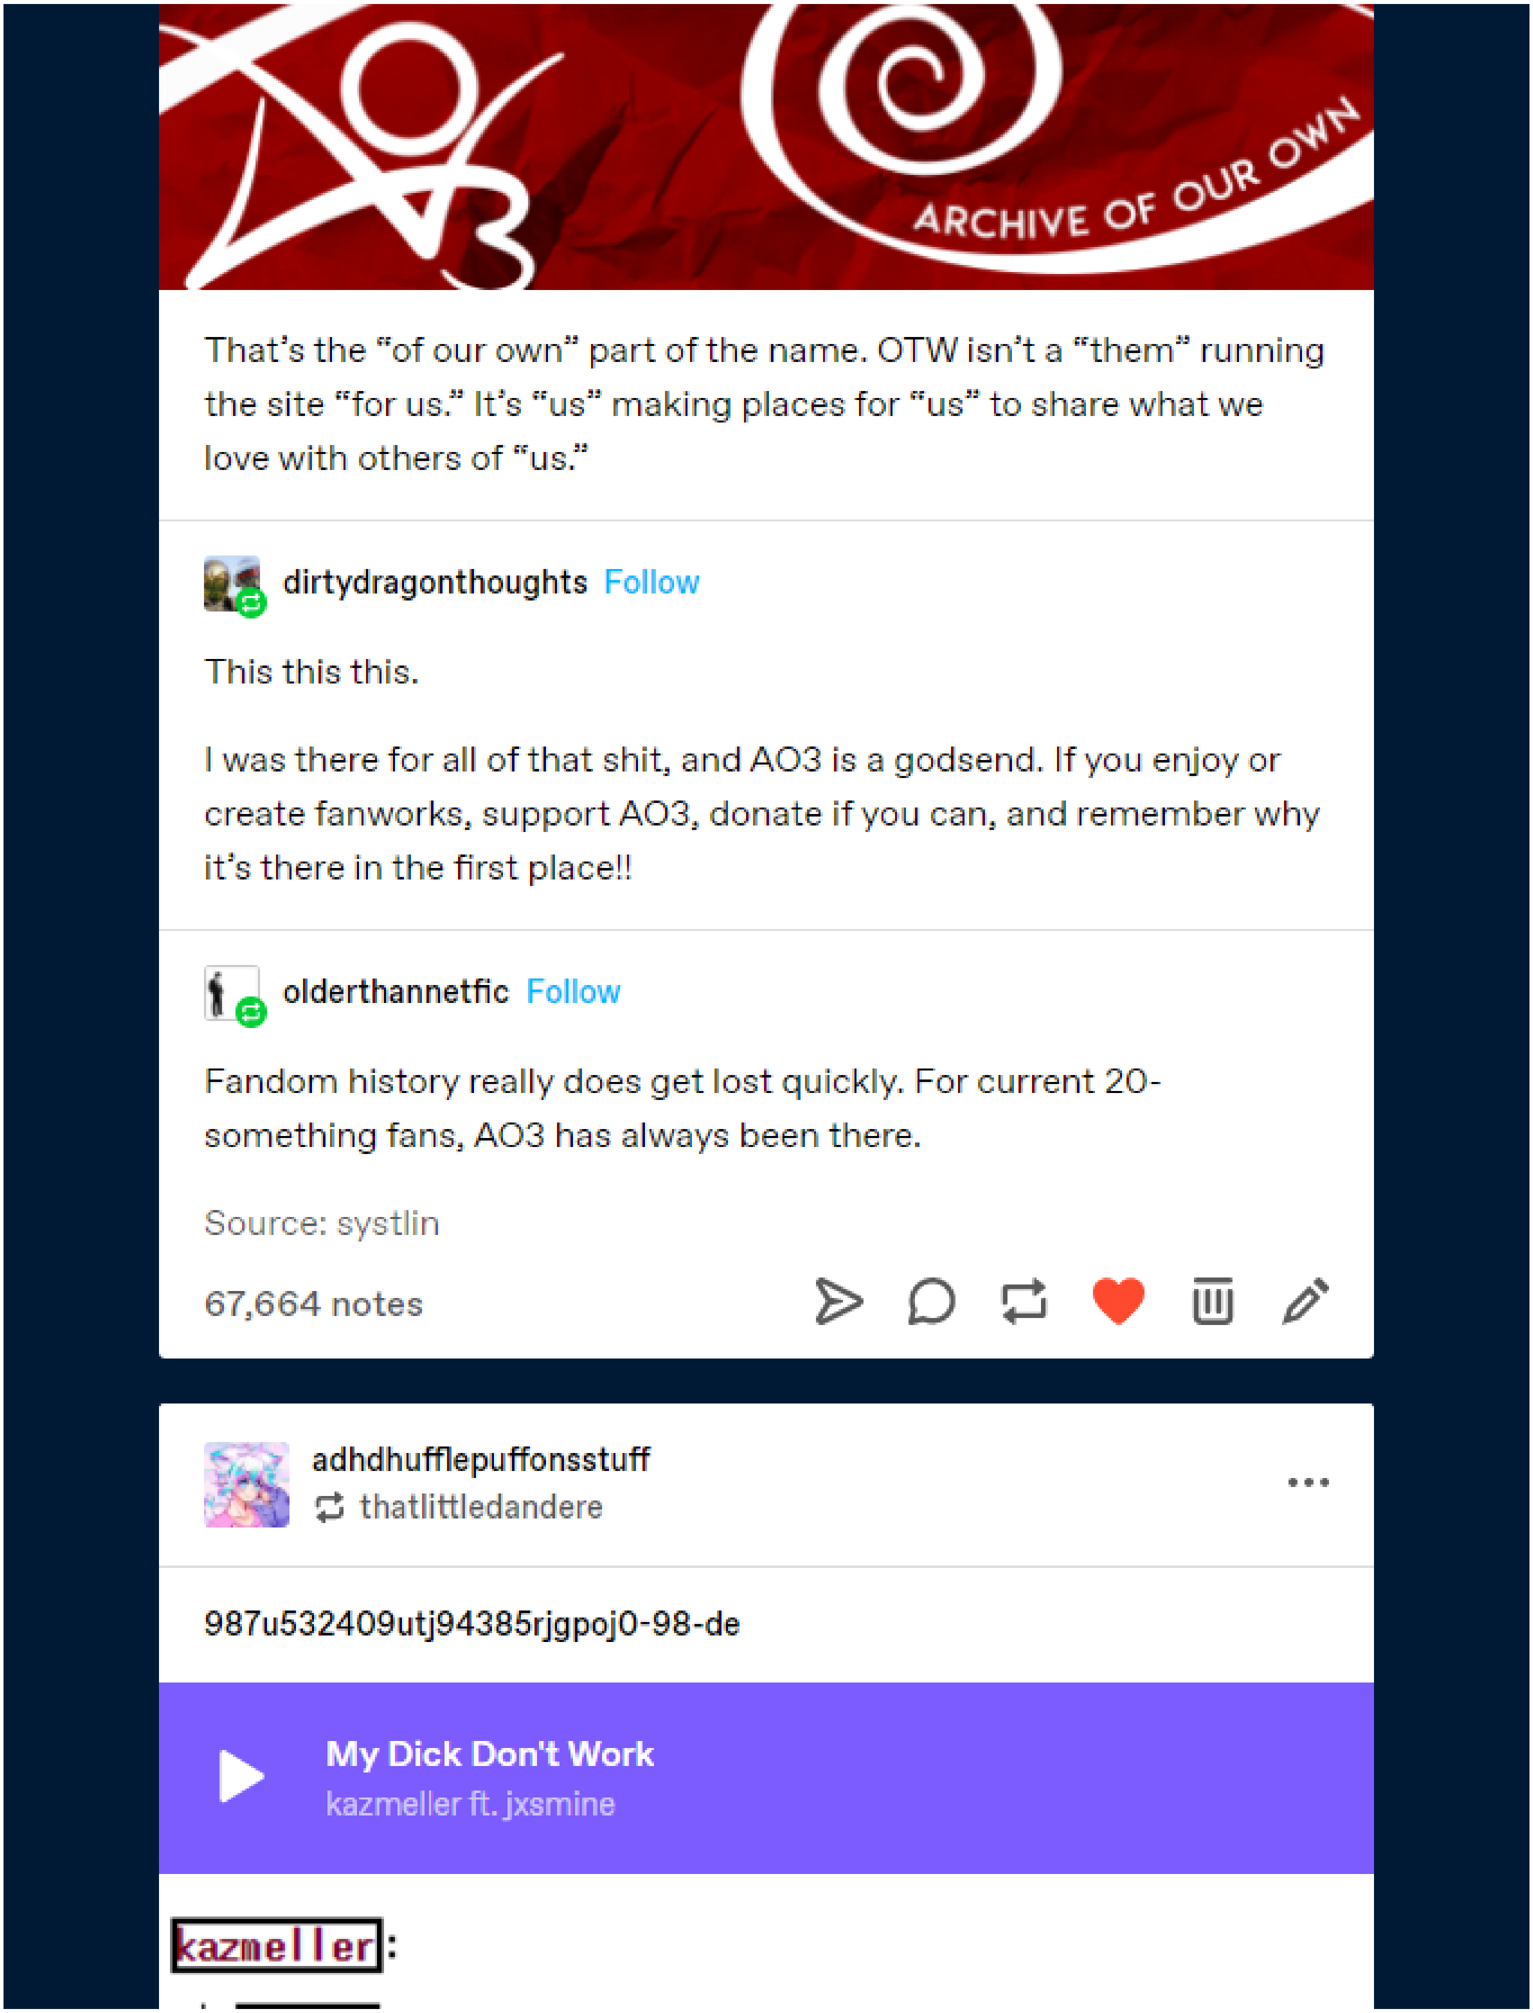
EVERYONE WORKING FOR THE OTW LOVES FANDOM. Wants it to survive. Wants it to be awesome for everyone.

(Knows that it can't be awesome for everyone; some approaches to fandom just clash hard. But they strive to minimize those clashes as much as possible, because they love fandom.)

AO3 is not some company that decided, "we'll make a site for fanfic and then..." I don't know what people are thinking is the reason. Money? Data harvesting? Tax shelter? Amusement and pity?

Nope; AO3 was fans saying, "Livejournal sucks; we're tired of this fucked-up 'rebuild every three years' garbage; WE NEED TO OWN THE DAMN SERVERS."

4 MILLION WORKS!



That's the "of our own" part of the name. OTW isn't a "them" running the site "for us." It's "us" making places for "us" to share what we love with others of "us."

dirtydragonthoughts

This this this.

I was there for all of that shit, and AO3 is a godsend. If you enjoy or create fanworks, support AO3, donate if you can, and remember why it's there in the first place!!

olderthannetfic

Fandom history really does get lost quickly. For current 20-something fans, AO3 has always been there.

Because I feel like kids of color don't hear it enough: domestic abuse is not a part of your culture.

A lot of us were raised with the idea that "its normal for wives/children to get hit! it helps them learn– only white folk don't get beaten when they misbehave". That's not true, white people aren't the only ones who deserve a safe and abuse free environment. Black and brown people can and do have loving families.

If you're in a situation where you are enduring abuse and people use your culture to justify it, I want you to know that what they're telling you are lies.

derinthescarletpescatarian Follow

The idea that nonwhite cultures are somehow based on abuse is so prevalent that my mandatory reporting abuse seminar had an entire section in it about how this is bullshit and we shouldn't ignore abused indigenous kids.

yandere-clown Follow

this goes very much for asian kids too btw. in a lot of asian countries, esp east asian ones, physical punishment has been very much a standard in disciplining children, both at home and in the classroom, so this is something that's often brought over to america when families immigrate and stuff i can't tell you the number of times my mother has told me "in america you can't hit kids or else they'll call it child abuse and take your kids away, but back home you have to hit them, or else they'll never learn" and stuff like "with chinese kids you have to hit them or else they'll turn out spoiled"

so like, despite what your parents tell you, no kids deserve to get beaten, and you're not "assimilated" for thinking so

adamxthextreme

Ok so like yes, poc culture, especially with east asian families in my experience do have some very strict and borderline abusive ideals, but like in some ways this idea that POC families and disciplinarian styles are abusive detracts from the fact that white people are just as bad many times in conservative christian circles where white christians have written wholeass books about the best way to beat your kid (Example: to train up a child) so yeah....

autistic-demigirl

As a white kid who was beaten by my parents somewhat often it's a big thing and there are even schools that use corporal punishment. So many kids of various races are beaten by their parent as "punishment" and it is so wrong. I have lasting trauma from it and it's worse because I'm autistic and a lot of the times I was beaten it was because I was having meltdowns about having to go to school when I was already super overwhelmed (although I wasn't aware of that at the time). I do not believe in physical punishments.

dragonladdie

👋 hi I am an indigenous american person and let me tell you I have NEVER gotten beaten before and I turned out PERFECTLY FUCKING FINE

If you don't remember Sophie M Herold, she is a German girl, who is extremely homophobic and transphobic. She has found out LGBTQ persons names, addresses, personal info etc. And set up her own database.

Her intentions with this are harmful.

She is sending out this information, your information, your best friends information, someone you love and care about. She's sending it to hate groups, malicious people, people with bad intentions.

And if you think I'm blowing this out of proportion, people have been kicked out of homes, disowned by families and even MURDERED. Yes, murdered. Innocent people who have done nothing but love.

She has had numerous blogs and each have been removed. Tumblr staff are aware of her, and as far as I'm aware she currently doesn't have a blog, but this does not mean she isn't still on peoples tumblrs, asking via anon where you live, what your name is.

An email I received today. She's sending out information of same sex couples with children so the children can be kidnapped. She entitled it "Time to strike back". If that doesn't suggest harmful intentions I don't know what does.

Please be extremely careful what you post on tumblr, on twitter, facebook, anywhere. Do NOT give out your full name or your address, or even the town in which you live. Look out for one another, and don't answer any suspicious anons. Especially if they use your name in quotation marks.

Sophie M Herold is still out there, she always will be, so please spead this message and warn people. She's attacking in silence. We don't need more people dying because of her actions. Please pass this along!

not to be inclusionist on main but i find it shocking and frankly a little horrifying how easily the online LGBTQ community has turned on itself in the past 2 years. like, i need you all to know: i'm not old. i'm 23. so that leaves about a bit less than a decade of me knowing i'm gay, and a bit less than that of me learning about my new family and friends and lifestyle and such, as well as a bit less for actively campaigning/being deeply involved in civil rights and social justice issues.

like, i don't know if yall realize this if youre newer here but: this whole "asexuality exclusion" thing and this "queer is a slur" thing? this is new. this is only within the past two or so years that its gained any real momentum, the same with terfs and radfems. it wasn't a concept. there were massive, massive rallies in support of our asexual community. it's horrifying to me how simply and neatly we as a group have gone from "The A doesn't stand for Ally" to "There is no A at all".

and i need you all to know: this is not a coincidence that TERFS have risen up in roughly the same time period. i need you all to realize that when you talk about your exclusion of asexuals from our community, you are parroting well-known TERF and neo-nazi rhetoric.

"they are invading [LGBT/women's/white] safe spaces to steal our resources and oppress us."

"they're only pretending to be [gay/a woman]."

"[asexual/trans women/POC] aren't REALLY [LGBT/women/human]."

and it goes deeper, fundamentally flawed: when you try to reason that asexuality isn't inherently LGBT, but if you are otherwise LGBT but asexual it's somehow fine and different but otherwise youre cishet...all you're saying is that "you're only allowed in this club if you don't support others who are like you. you're only allowed in this club because i as an authority say you fit nicely under a label that i agree with.

it's terrifying, to me, and i'm not asexual. it's terrifying that this manufactured divide using literal talking points created by and stolen from TERFs and neo-nazis has such an appeal to so many LGBT people. i'm worried for our future on so many levels; climate change, political upheaval, the list goes on. standing strong together is so important right now, perhaps more than ever, at least in my lifetime. and yet we are so destructively focused on ideas of 'the model of social justice' and 'purity culture' and 'respectability politics' and so on that we would rather turn on our own–not even our allies but our own community–because we don't think they're LGBT enough.

we spent so long saying "my sexuality isn't a choice" and arguing "why would i choose to be oppressed for my sexuality" and yet…here we are.

prismatic-bell

@thetatteredveil just in case you get any yahoos arguing with you (who are we kidding this is Tumblr you totally will), I'm 32. I've been an activist since 2006.

YOU ARE COMPLETELY CORRECT.

42, activist since 1995. TERFs have been around longer than that, they just called themselves other things, like "lesbian separatists". They've come around before, and we told them they weren't fucking wanted. We united against them, and their numbers and influence dwindled. Now they're back, along with the rest of the fucking fascists.

You ARE correct, OP, but that isn't all that's correct. Here's what you don't know from experience, only from theory: We beat them before, and we can beat them again. And we're going to have to.

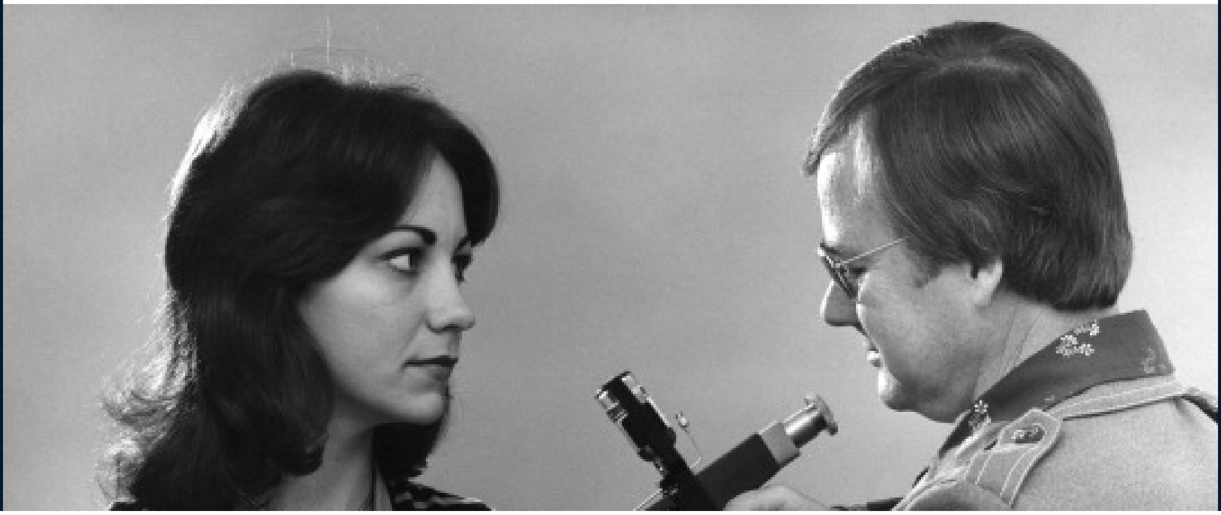
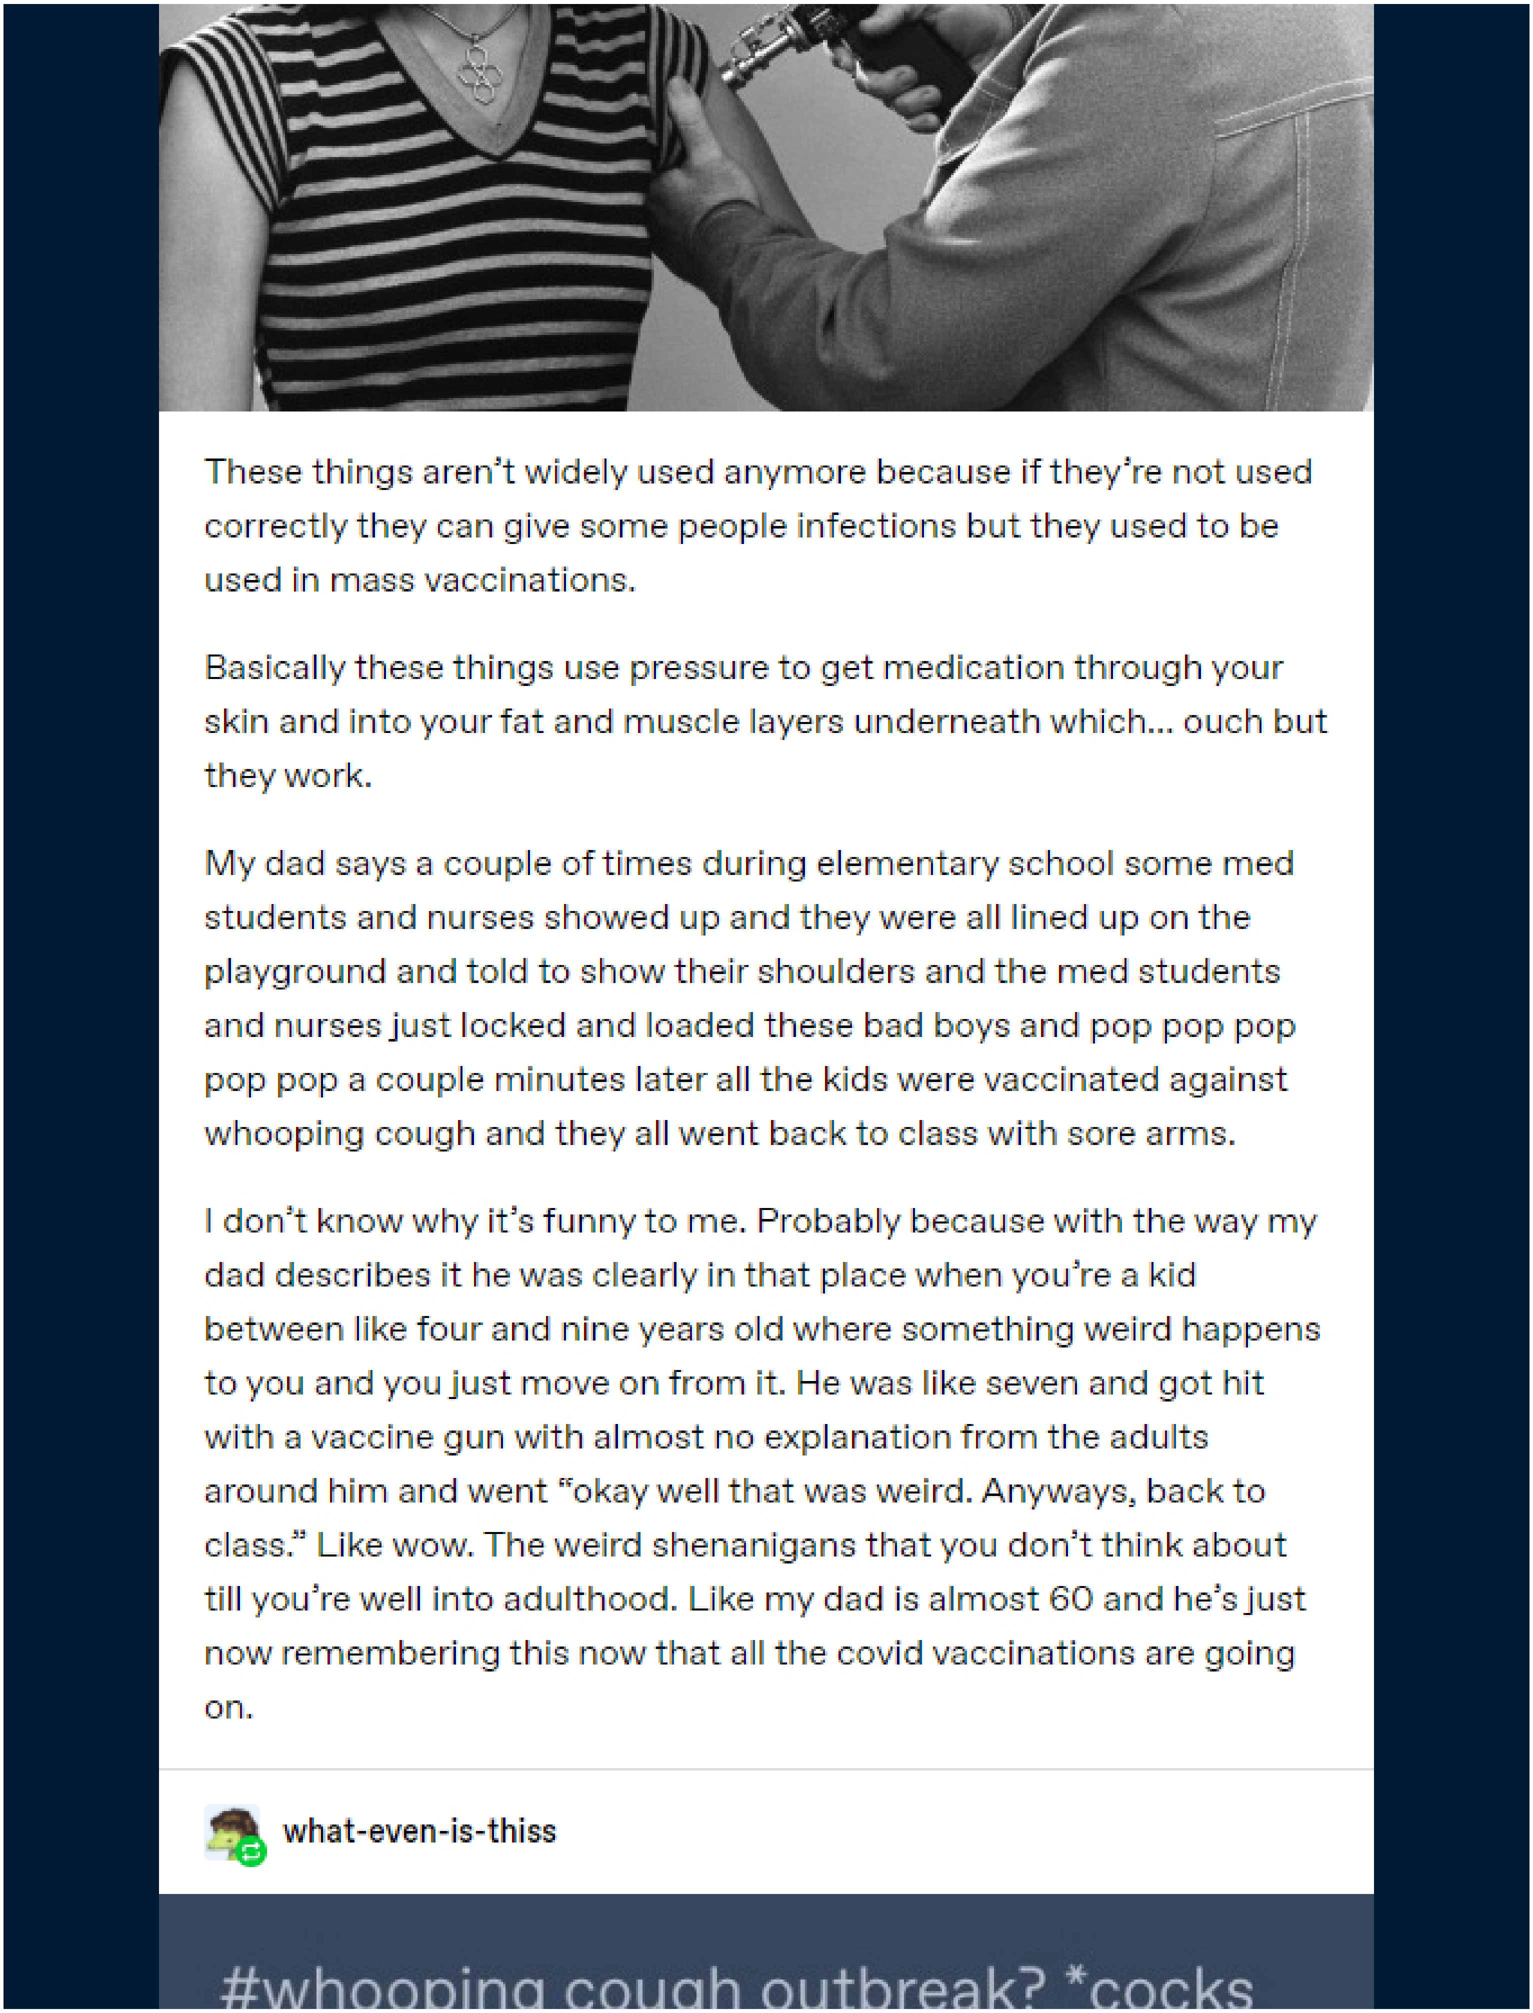
My dad was telling me about something that he described as a “gun that put vaccines through my skin” when he was a kid and I looked it up and I think he’s talking about jet injectors





These things aren't widely used anymore because if they're not used correctly they can give some people infections but they used to be used in mass vaccinations.

Basically these things use pressure to get medication through your skin and into your fat and muscle layers underneath which… ouch but they work.

My dad says a couple of times during elementary school some med students and nurses showed up and they were all lined up on the playground and told to show their shoulders and the med students and nurses just locked and loaded these bad boys and pop pop pop pop pop a couple minutes later all the kids were vaccinated against whooping cough and they all went back to class with sore arms.

I don't know why it's funny to me. Probably because with the way my dad describes it he was clearly in that place when you're a kid between like four and nine years old where something weird happens to you and you just move on from it. He was like seven and got hit with a vaccine gun with almost no explanation from the adults around him and went "okay well that was weird. Anyways, back to class." Like wow. The weird shenanigans that you don't think about till you're well into adulthood. Like my dad is almost 60 and he's just now remembering this now that all the covid vaccinations are going on.

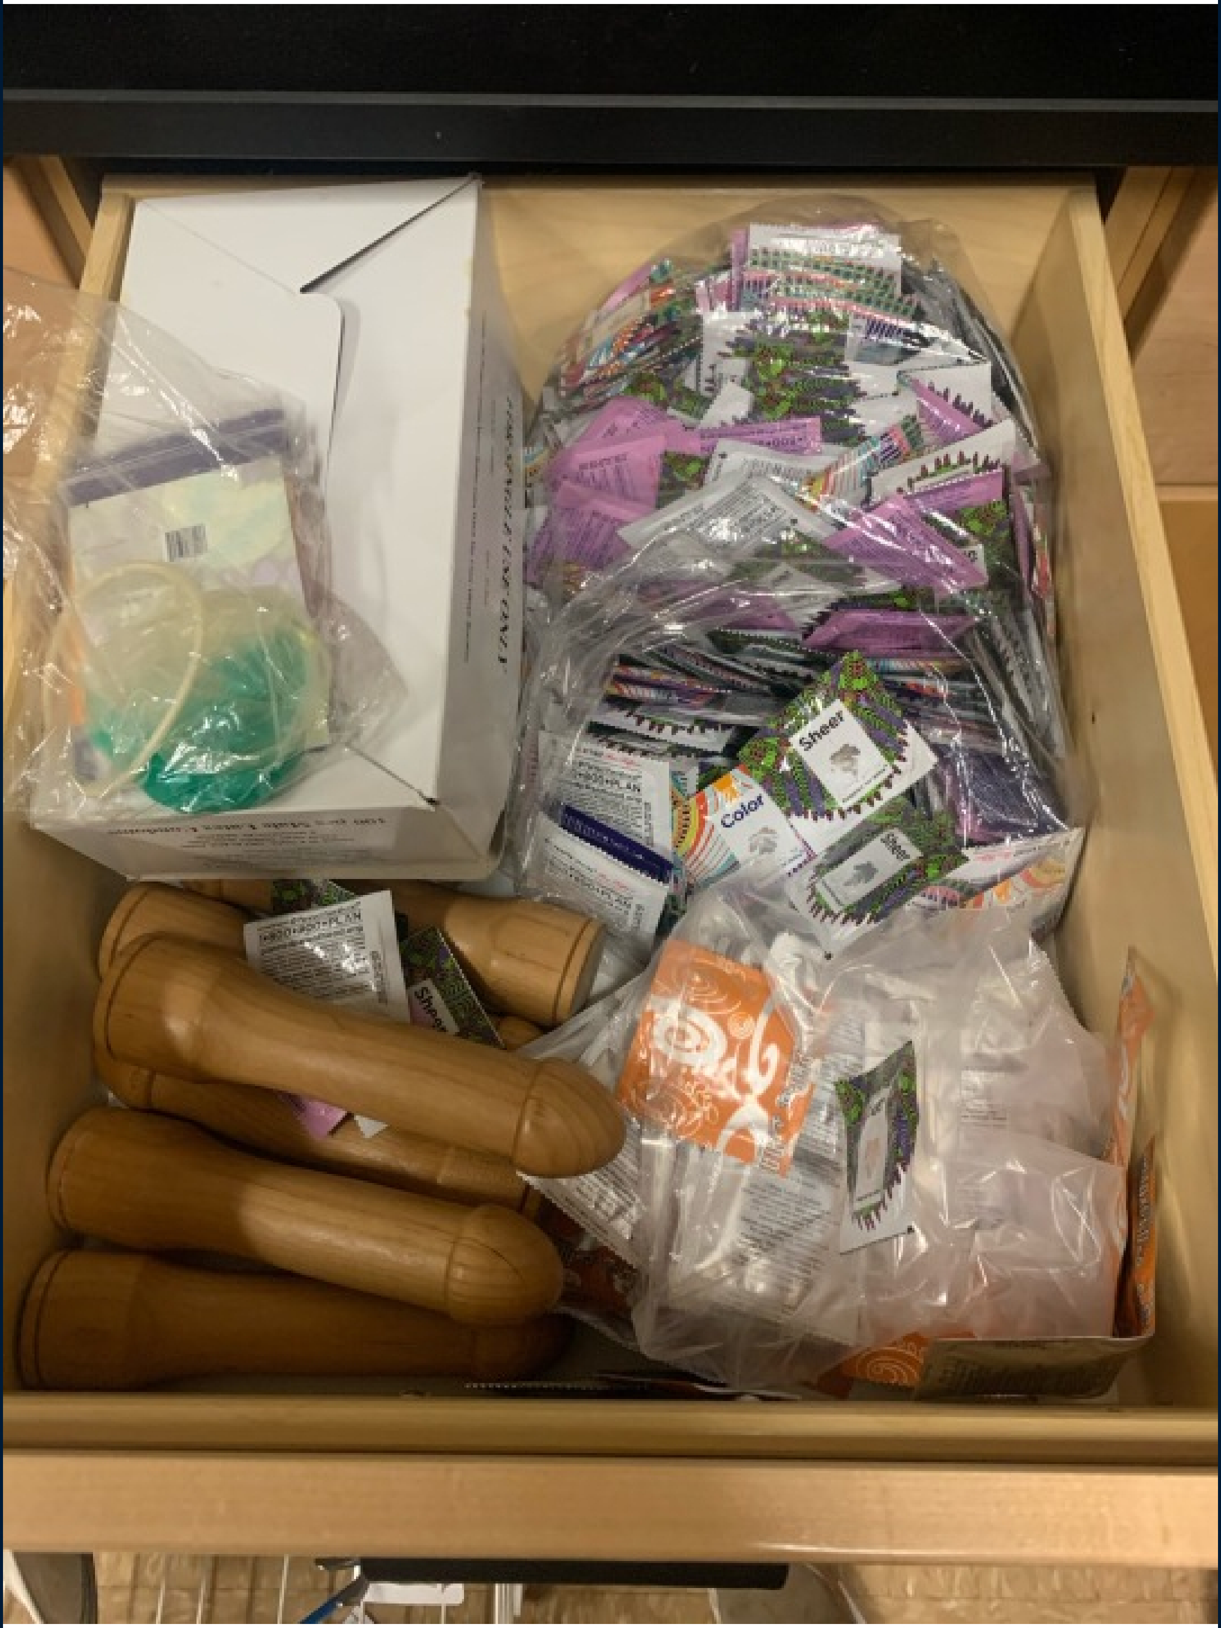
Today, on this fateful day in sex ed, I have to teach 25 9th graders how to put condoms on wooden dicks without losing my composure. Wish me luck lmao

kroseteaches Follow

Now to find a way to discreetly transport this entire drawer to the other side of the building...



kroseteaches Follow

Today went well overall. Lots of great conversations took place alongside some... very silly ones lmao.

Here are some highlights from this morning's lesson:

Me: removes the wooden dicks from my bag and slaps them on the table

Students collectively: o_O

That one student: nice

Me: demonstrating how to put on a condom

Also me: puts it on wrong the first time, even though I practiced twice beforehand So everyone, here we see what not to do. Let's try that again

Me: finished demonstration, holding a sheathed wooden dick so what questions do we have about condoms before I unleash you all to practice on the models?

Student: raises hand yeah, I'm wondering how you're feeling about your life choices up until this point?

Me: o-o

Student 1: raises hand miss, why are the condoms so... slimy?

Me: thats lubricant, it helps get rid of friction that might cause discomfort during intercourse.

Student 2: raises hand can you use lube on a slip and slide?

Me: genuinely considering the possibility

during a conversation about excuses people have heard for not wearing condoms

Student 1: I had a guy tell me he was too big to fit in a condom

Me: opens a condom, puts entire forearm inside and pulls it up to my elbow here's why that's not true

Student 2: I once saw a video of somebody that put an entire watermelon in a condom before, so unless that dude's got a watermelon shlong, that's cap.

Me: slowly losing composure behind my mask you have the right idea, but let's refrain from using the word 'shlong' in class, please.

Me: what are some ideas of things we can say to people who try to pressure you into having unprotected sex?

Student 1: tell them you don't want their penis cooties!!

Student 2: penis cooties? Pretty sure that's just herpes

Me, internally: like... you're not wrong

Me: alright everyone, time to return the wooden models up front. Remove the condoms by firmly grasping the base of the model and sliding it off. Don't forget to throw it away please!

Student 1: FIRMLY GRASP IT

Student 2: idk if I can return it now, miss. I've become attached to mine(the wooden dick)

Student 3: yeah, most men are

Me: trying to keep a straight face

Student 1: miss, why are the wooden dicks so shiny when you take the condom off the condom on

Me: oh, that's just the lubricant from the condom.

Student 2: so you know you put the condom on right if your dick is shiny after?

Student 3: yeah! If your dick is shiny, you're doing it right

Me: trying to keep my composure pt. 36716159 uh, yeah that's not necessarily the case. You see, these models are wooden. Penises are not.

Student 3: then why is it called morning wood?

Me: internally self destructs

Me: casually wiping off the lube from wooden dicks w/ a paper towel before returning them to my bag so what questions do we have about the use of contraception?

Student: miss can you please not make eye contact with us while you do that?

We used to have a DM but he got tired of DMing so we tried out this ad one of us found on a flyer and met her at the library. At first we played at one guy's dorm but she didn't like that because it was messy and we usually wouldn't bother showering sometimes or dressing well because we didn't care but now we play at her place and she says we have to smell good and be well dressed before she lets us inside. It's a bit annoying sometimes but she calls us handsome when we do and I don't hear that very often.

Anonymous | 57059631 16 hr. ago

>>57059520
I don't know what she does for work and she gives out stickers for good roleplaying, clever tactics and letting everyone do something. Everyone gets given at least 1 sticker a session though. And no she hasn't said anything about the other stickers except that she's saving them.

Because it's not just that. I like her as a DM but sometimes she'll do really embarrassing things like hold a kareoke contest in game and then play songs from Grease and make us all sing.

Anonymous 57059970 15 hr. ago

>>57059812
I haven't asked her. One guy tried to once but we're not supposed to talk about non game related stuff when we're playing and she jokingly threatened to take away one of his stickers but she's never done that before so we knew she was actually being serious.

Anonymous | 57060275 15 hr. ago

>>57060245
At the start she always cooked something but then she offered an extra sticker if we'd do it and gave us some printed laminated recipe sheets so we take it in turns to bring food now.

Scriabin - Poème-Nocturne, op.61 (1912)

Despite how much Scriabin loved Chopin, and how influential the Polish composer was to him, he only wrote one nocturne. Plenty of preludes and a few handfuls of mazurka, but no nocturnes, save the subtitle of this poem. Because of the subtitle we can assume this poem is trying to be an evocative night piece, and over the long and sensual melodies there are flickers and chirps that sound like insects. A kind of hushed and spooky use of night music. Typical of Scriabin's late period, it flows out of any recognizable tonality and emphasizes a sense of complete freedom. Walking along in the night, guided only by the moon, and the sense of being alone and all of the fears that nighttime brings with it, but somehow still being enticed by the magical atmosphere.

It's really hard being the one who has to fight for basic needs and emotional support. That isn't to say Thor didn't get a shit shaft. But I understand being in Loki's position with multiple step parents. You're never enough and anything valuable is made less important compared to the biological kids. But geez, I'm drunk and exhausted fro. Crying because I have so much trauma. How does no one see this in his character. There are so many who see him as a villain and not and an individual traumatized by colonialism and not being the biological kid. Holyshit. I can't imagine not seeing this. HEY PARENTS!!!

Do you have a 14 or 15 year old?

Do they need a job??
We will hire them!
Ask for an application!!

aethelflaedladyofmercia

The fact that this is addressed to the parents, not the kids, is especially creepy?

Anyway, Federal Child Labor Laws: (apply to ALL states)

--Children under 14 (13 for agricultural labor) can only be employed by their own parents/guardians

--14-15 year olds are limited to 3 hours per day, 18 hours per week during the school year (up to 8 hours on weekends/holidays), and 8 hours per day, 40 hours per week when school is not in session.

--They are also limited to working 7am-7pm (or 9pm during the summer), and only outside of school hours summer), and only outside of school hours

--Only a specific list of jobs are permitted for children of this age (relevant to this, they are allowed to reheat food, wash dishes and equipment, and do some limited cooking/food prep such as washing vegetables). Any work outside this list is prohibited.

--There is also a broad list of jobs/duties they are prohibited from (including any work with ladders, or work with powered meat slicers or several types of powered baking equipment)

--Oh, hey, this is interesting! The federal minimum wage for employees under the age of 20 is $4.25 for the first 90 days they hold a job. I wonder how many days fall between the end of the school year and the start of the next. Oh? Just about 90? What an odd coincidence, that this company would be looking to hire children just before the time of year when they can work (a) later hours (b) more hours per week and (c) likely to need to stop before they get shifted to the full minimum wage.

(An entirely different set of rules apply to agricultural work, and for working directly for one's parents or family. There are also some jobs allowed to children under 14. I'm not going into those.)

Now, I'm not opposed to 14 and 15 year olds working appropriate jobs. I babysat at that age, other kids mowed lawns, raked leaves, life guarded at pools, etc.

But there is something a little predatory about this sign, particularly going up now.

And as people have pointed out, kids that age don't know their rights. They don't know the laws. And even if they do, they don't know that the laws are there to protect them. I've known plenty of teenagers who think they boss is doing them a favor by allowing them to work outside their limited hours, or continue working while clocked out for their lunch break. When I worked as a waitress, my manager suggested this as a way to earn extra tips. Heck, I was almost THIRTY, and you wouldn't believe how many little ways they tried to wriggle around the rules to get a little more work out of me. (Unless you've worked this kind of job, then you'd absolutely believe it.)

Another thing--these jobs are exhausting. I've worked manual labor, I've worked in schools, retail, all kinds of jobs, but nothing made me end the day, back throbbing, fling-myself-into-bed tired like working in a restaurant. I don't know what it is, maybe the hectic pace of the busy hours, maybe the way you're expected to be busy every second of your time there, maybe it's the fact that I spent most of each day walking as fast as I could from one end of the building to the other. I don't know. But I wouldn't wish that on any 14-year-old.

So, anyway, I'm looking at this little flyer, and I'm concerned. Not because I don't think a 14-year-old should ever work. But because I'm trying to think why a BK would put out a sign SPECIFICALLY asking for the youngest age they can employ, with NO details suggesting this is a special youth-support or training program, only A FEW WEEKS before summer vacation, and targeted to their PARENTS who, let's face it, are probably eager to get some time away from the kids after the last year.

Why would any business make this SPECIFIC ad? I don't know, but every answer I come up with doesn't sit well with me.

tickety-boo-af

With the current shortage of adults willing to work an exhausting job at a non-living wage, they are looking for anyone else they can exploit. A business should be considered failing if it can't pay its adult employees enough to get by.

redneckcomulist

Also relevant: these kids are almost certainly not vaccinated, and its extremely clear they will not be protected, especially as places relax mask mandates. In 2020 being a line cook was the most dangerous job in the country, the conditions that caused that danger haven't changed. This will get some of these kids killed.

hey so fun fact... home owners associations became a thing when people of color started moving into nice neighborhoods.

white people wanted to make sure their new Jewish, Black, and Brown neighbors couldn't put up "non-christian" symbols that made their homes identifiable to the point of "lowering property values".

they would impose rules like lawn maintenance and aesthetic upkeep while threatening anyone who offered services like painting, roofing, gutters, trash, or shoveling snow to their non-white neighbors.

“Anger is the demand of accountability, It is evaluation, judgment, and refutation. It is reflective, visionary, and participatory. It’s a speech act, a social statement, an intention, and a purpose. It’s a risk and a threat. A confirmation and a wish. It is both powerlessness and power, palliative and a provocation. In anger, you will find both ferocity and comfort, vulnerability and hurt. Anger is the expression of hope.

How much anger is too much? Certainly not the anger that, for many of us, is a remembering of a self we learned to hide and quiet. It is wilful and disobedient. It is survival, liberation, creativity, urgency, and vibrancy. It is a statement of need. An insistence of acknowledgment. Anger is a boundary. Anger is boundless. An opportunity for contemplation and self-awareness. It is commitment. Empathy. Self-love. Social responsibility. If it is poison, it is also the antidote. The anger we have as women is an act of radical imagination. Angry women burn brighter than the sun.”

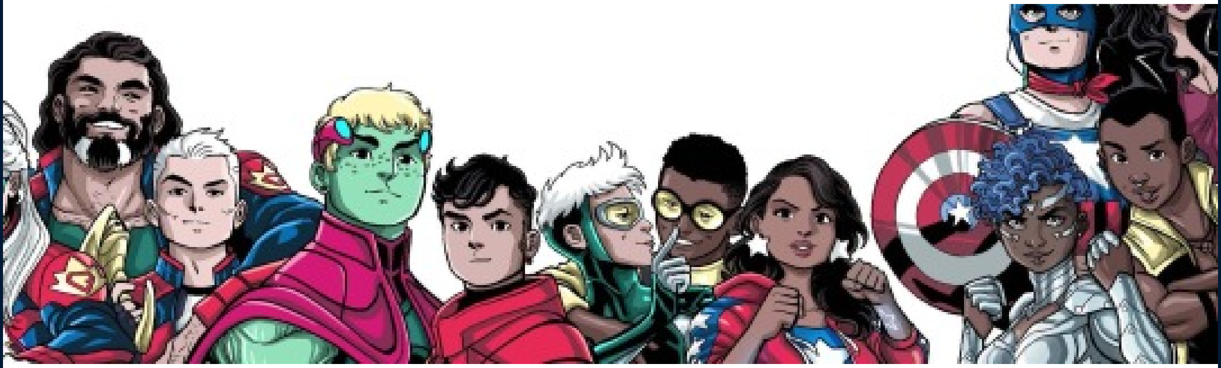
I was wondering why Loki wasn’t featured in any of the Marvel‘s Voices: Pride cover art, as he is more or less queer in the comics and mythology. But it turns out, he freaking was featured, but Marvel cut him out!

This seems to be the earlier version of the cover and this is what became the official artwork:



They actually cut him out which doesn't bode well at all for the Loki series and Marvel's future representation of queer characters at large. If they will do it with Loki, they will do it with the Young Avengers too. Both Loki and Billy and Teddy (and Tommy) are incredibly important to me and this behavior worries me greatly.

‘Loki’ takes over: Tom Hiddleston on his new TV series and a decade in the MCU

Ten years after Hiddleston first chose chaos in Thor, Marvel’s fan favorite God of Mischief is going even bigger with his time-bending Disney+ show.

Tom Hiddleston is Loki, and he is burdened with glorious purpose: After playing Thor’s puckish brother for over a decade in the Marvel Cinematic Universe, no one understands the mercurial Asgardian God of Mischief as well as the actor. He can teach an entire seminar on Loki if given the opportunity — which he actually did during pre-production on his forthcoming Disney+ show. In conversation, Hiddleston quotes lines from his MCU debut, 2011’s Thor, almost verbatim, and will playfully correct you if you mistakenly refer to Asgard's Rainbow Bridge as the Bifrost, which is the portal that connects Loki and Thor's homeworld to the Nine Realms, including Midgard, a.k.a. Earth. "Well, the Bifrost technically is the energy that runs through the bridge," he says with a smile. "But nine points to Gryffindor!" And when he shows up to the photo shoot for this very digital cover, he hops on a call with our photo editor to pitch ways the concept could be even more Loki, like incorporating the flourish the trickster does whenever magically conjuring something. The lasting impression is that playing Loki isn't just a paycheck.

"Rather than ownership, it's a sense of responsibility I feel to give my best every time and do the best I can because I feel so grateful to be a part of what Marvel Studios has created," the 40-year-old Brit tells EW over Zoom a few days after the shoot and a week out from Thor's 10th anniversary. "I just want to make sure I've honored that responsibility with the best that I can give and the most care and thought and energy."

After appearing in three Thor movies and three Avengers, Hiddleston is bringing that passion to his first solo Marvel project, Loki, the House of Ideas' third Disney+ series following the sitcom pastiche WandaVision and the topical The Falcon and the Winter Soldier. Led by head writer Michael Waldron (Doctor Strange in the Multiverse of Madness, Heels), the six-episode drama sees Hiddleston's shapeshifting agent of chaos step out from behind his brother's shadow and into the spotlight for a timey-wimey, sci-fi adventure that aims to get to the bottom of who Loki really is. "I wanted to explore slightly more complex character questions," says Waldron. "It's not just good versus bad. Is anybody all good? Is anybody all bad? What makes a hero, a hero? A villain, a villain?"

Even though Loki — who loves sowing mayhem with his illusion magic and shapeshifting, all with a major chip on his shoulder — has never been one for introspection, the idea of building an entire show around him was a no-brainer for Marvel. When asked why Loki was one of the studio's first Disney+ shows, Marvel president Kevin Feige replies matter-of-factly, "More Hiddleston, more Loki." First introduced as Thor's (Chris Hemsworth) envious brother in Kenneth Branagh's Thor, Loki went full Big Bad in 2012's The Avengers. That Branagh's Thor, Loki went full Big Bad in 2012's The Avengers. That film cemented the impish rogue as one of the shared universe's fan favorites, thanks to Hiddleston's ability to make him deliciously villainous yet charismatic and, most importantly, empathetic. The character's popularity is one of the reasons he's managed to avoid death many times.

"He's been around for thousands of years. He had all sorts of adventures," says Feige. "Wanting to fill in the blanks and see much more of Loki's story [was] the initial desire [for the series]."

The Loki we meet on the show is not the one who fought the Avengers in 2012 and evolved into an antihero in Thor: The Dark World and Thor: Ragnarok before meeting his demise at the hands of the mad titan Thanos (Josh Brolin) in 2018's Avengers: Infinity War. Instead, we'll be following a Loki from a branched timeline (a variant, if you will) after he stole the Tesseract following his thwarted New York invasion and escaped S.H.I.E.L.D. custody during the time heist featured in Avengers: Endgame. In other words, this Loki hasn't gone through any sort of redemption arc. He's still the charming yet petulant god who firmly believes he's destined to rule and has never gotten his due.

Premiering June 9, Loki begins with the Time Variance Authority — a bureaucratic organization tasked with safeguarding the proper flow of time — arresting the Loki Variant seen in Endgame because they want his help fixing all of the timeline problems he caused while on the run with the Tesseract. So there will be time travel, and a lot more of it than in Endgame. As Loki makes his way through his own procedural, he'll match wits with new characters including Owen Wilson's Agent Mobius, a brilliant TVA analyst, and Gugu Mbatha-Raw's Judge Renslayer. The question in early episodes is whether Loki will help them or take over.

"One of the things Kevin Feige led on was, 'I think we should find a way of exploring the parts of Loki that are independent of his relationship with Thor,' or see him in a duality or in relationship with others, which I thought was very exciting," says Hiddleston, who also serves as an executive producer on the show. "So the Odinson saga, that trilogy of films, still has its integrity, and we don't have to reopen it and retell it."

Yet, in order to understand where Loki is going, it's important to see where he came from.

Hiddleston can't believe how long he and Loki have been connected. "I've been playing this character for 11 years," he says. "Which is the first time I have said that sentence, I realize, and it [blows] my mind. I don't know what percentage that is exactly of my 40 years of being alive, but it's substantial."

His time as Loki actually goes a bit further back, to 2009 — a year after Robert Downey Jr. big banged the MCU into existence with Iron Man — when he auditioned for Thor. It's no secret that Hiddleston initially went in for the role of the titular God of Thunder, but Feige and director Kenneth Branagh thought his natural charm and flexibility as an actor made him better suited for the movie's damaged antagonist. "Tom gave you an impression that he could be ready for anything, performance-wise," says Branagh, who had previously worked with him on a West End revival of Checkov's Ivanov and the BBC series Wallander. "Tom has a wild imagination, so does Loki. He's got a mischievous sense of humor and he was ready to play. It felt like he had a star personality, but he was a team player."

Hiddleston fully immersed himself in the character. Outside of studying Loki's history in the Marvel Comics, he also researched how Loki and the Trickster God archetype appeared across mythology and different cultures. "He understood that he was already in something special [and] it was a special character in a special part of that early moment in the life of the Marvel universe where [he] also needed to step up in other ways," says Branagh, who was impressed by the emotional depth Hiddleston brought to the part, especially when it came to how isolated Loki felt in the Asgardian royal family.

There was a lot riding on that first Thor feature. For one, no one knew if audiences would immediately latch onto a Shakespearean superhero movie partially set on an alien planet populated by the Norse Gods of legend. Second, it was integral to Feige's plans for the shared universe. Loki was supposed to be the main villain in The Avengers, which would not only mirror how Earth's mightiest heroes joined forces in 1963's Avengers #1 but also give Thor a believable reason for teaming up with Iron Man, Captain America (Chris Evans), and the rest of the capes. Feige first clued Hiddleston into those larger plans when the actor was in L.A. before Thor started shooting.

"I was like, 'Excuse me?' Because he was already three, four steps ahead," says Hiddleston. "That took me a few minutes to process, because I didn't quite realize how it just suddenly had a scope. And being cast as Loki, I realized, was a very significant moment for me in my life, and was going to remain. The creative journey was going to be so exciting."

Hiddleston relished the opportunity to go full villain in Avengers, like in the scene where Loki ordered a crowd to kneel before him outside a German opera house: "It's the unspoken truth of humanity, that you crave subjugation," says the Machiavellian god. "The bright lure of freedom diminishes your life's joy in a mad scramble for power, for identity. You were made to be ruled. In the end, you will always kneel."

"I just knew that in the structure of that film, I had to lean into his role as a pure antagonist," Hiddleston recalls. "What I always found curious and complex about the way Loki is written in Avengers, is that his status as an antagonist comes from the same well of not belonging and being marginalized and isolated in the first Thor film. Loki now knows he has no place in Asgard."

Loki did find a place within the audience's hearts, though. Feige was "all in" on Hiddleston as his Loki from the beginning, but even he couldn't predict how much fans would love him. Feige recalls the reaction at the 2013 San Diego Comic-Con: "Did we know that after he was the villain in two movies, he would be bringing thousands of people to their feet in Hall H, in costume, chanting his name? No, that was above and beyond the plan that we were hoping for and dreaming of." It was a dream Feige first got an inkling of a year earlier during the Avengers press tour when a Russian fan slipped past security, snuck into Mark Ruffalo's car, and asked the Hulk actor to give Hiddleston a piece of fan art she created. "That was one of the early signs there was much more happening with this quote-unquote villain."

Despite that popularity, the plan was to kill Loki off in 2013's Thor: The Dark World, but the studio reversed course after test audiences refused to believe he actually died fighting the Dark Elves. Alas, he couldn't out-illusion death forever. After returning in Taika Waititi's colorful and idiosyncratic Thor: Ragnarok, Hiddleston's character perished for real in the opening moments of Infinity War. In typical Loki fashion, before Thanos crushed his windpipe, he delivered a defiant speech that indicated he'd finally made peace with the anger he felt toward his family.

"It felt very, very final, and I thought, 'Okay, that's it. This is Loki's final bow and a conclusive end to the Odinson saga,'" says Hiddleston, who shot that well-earned death scene in 2017.

But, though he didn't know it yet, the actor's MCU story was far from over.

EXCLUSIVE

When Hiddleston returned to film two scenes in Avengers: Endgame in 2017, he had no idea where Loki portaled off to after snatching the Tesseract. "Where'd he go? When does he go? How does he get there? These are all questions I remember asking on the day, and then not being given any answers," Hiddleston recalls. To be fair, it's likely the Powers That Be didn't necessarily have answers then. While Feige can't exactly recall when the writers' room for Endgame first devised Loki's escape sequence, he does know that setting up a future show wasn't the primary goal — because a Loki series wasn't on the horizon just yet.

"[That scene] was really more of a wrinkle so that one of the missions that the Avengers went on in Endgame could get screwed up and not go well, which is what required Cap and Tony to go further back in time to the '70s," says Feige. Soon after that, though, former Disney CEO Bob Iger approached Feige about producing content for the studio's forthcoming streaming service. "I think the notion that we had left this hanging loose end with Loki gave us the in for what a Loki series could be. So by the time [Endgame] came out, we did know where it was going."

As for Hiddleston, he didn't find out about the plans for a Loki show until spring 2018, a few weeks before Infinity War hit theaters. "I probably should not have been surprised, but I was," says the actor. "But only because Infinity War had felt so final."

Nevertheless, Hiddleston was excited about returning for his show. He was eager to explore Loki's powers, especially the shapeshifting, and what it meant that this disruptive figure still managed to find a seat beside the gods in mythology. "I love this idea [of] Loki's chaotic energy somehow being something we need. Even though, for all sorts of reasons, you don't know whether you can trust him. You don't know whether he's going to betray you. You don't why he's doing what he's doing," says Hiddleston. "If he's shapeshifting so often, does he even know who he is? And is he even interested in understanding who he is? Underneath all those masks, underneath the charm and the wit, which is kind of a defense anyway, does Loki have an authentic self? Is he introspective enough or brave enough to find out? I think all of those ideas are all in the series — ideas about identity, ideas about self-knowledge, self-acceptance, and the difficulty of it."

> "The series will explore Loki's powers in a way they have not yet been explored, which is very, very exciting."

The thing that truly sold Hiddleston on the show was Marvel's decision to include the Time Variance Authority, a move he describes as "the best idea that anybody had pertaining to the series." Feige and Loki executive producer Stephen Broussard had hoped to find a place for the TVA — an organization that debuted in 1986's Thor #372 and has appeared in She-Hulk and Fantastic Four stories — in the MCU for years, but the right opportunity never presented itself until Loki came along. "Putting Loki into his own procedural series became the eureka moment for the show," says Feige.

The TVA's perspective on time and reality also tied into the themes that Waldron, Loki's head writer, was hoping to explore. "Loki is a character that's always reckoning with his own identity, and the TVA, by virtue of what they do, is uniquely suited to hold up a mirror to Loki and make him really confront who he is and who he was supposed to be," says Waldron. Hiddleston adds: "[That] was very exciting because in the other films, there was always something about Loki that was very controlled. He seemed to know exactly what the cards in his hand were and how he was going to play them.... And Loki versus the TVA is Loki out of control immediately, and in an environment in which he's completely behind the pace, out of his comfort zone, destabilized, and acting out."

To truly dig into who Loki is, the creative team had to learn from the man who knows him best: Hiddleston. "I got him to do a thing called Loki School when we first started," says director Kate Herron. "I asked him to basically talk through his 10 years of the MCU — from costumes to stunts, to emotionally how he felt in each movie. It was fantastic."

Hiddleston got something out of the Loki school, too. Owen Wilson both attended the class and interviewed Hiddleston afterward so that he could better understand Loki, as his character Mobius is supposed to be an expert on him. During their conversation, Wilson pointedly asked Hiddleston what he loved about playing the character.

“And I said, 'I think it’s because he has so much range,'” says Hiddleston. “I remember saying this to him: 'On the 88 keys on the piano, he can play the twinkly light keys at the top. He can keep it witty and light, and he’s the God of Mischief, but he can also go down to the other side and play the heavy keys. And he can play some really profound chords down there, which are about grief and betrayal and loss and heartbreak and jealousy and pride.'” Hiddleston recalls Wilson being moved by the description: “He said, 'I think I might say that in the show.' And it was such a brilliant insight for me into how open Owen is as an artist and a performer.'”

Everyone involved is particularly excited for audiences to see Hiddleston and Wilson’s on-screen chemistry. “Mobius is not unlike Owen Wilson in that he’s sort of nonplussed by the MCU,” says Feige. “[Loki] is used to getting a reaction out of people, whether it’s his brother or his father, or the other Avengers. He likes to be very flamboyant and theatrical. Mobius doesn’t give him the reaction he’s looking for. That leads to a very unique relationship that Loki’s not used to.”

As for the rest of the series, we know that Loki will be jumping

As for the rest of the series, we know that Loki will be jumping around time and reality, but the creative team isn't keen on revealing when and where. "Every episode, we tried to take inspiration from different things," says Waldron, citing Blade Runner's noir aesthetic as one example.

"Part of the fun of the multiverse and playing with time is seeing other versions of characters, and other versions of the titular character in particular," says Feige, who also declined to confirm if Loki ties into Doctor Strange in the Multiverse of Madness and/or other upcoming projects.

Making Loki was especially meaningful to Hiddleston because they shot most of it during the pandemic, in late 2020. "It will remain one of the absolute most intense, most rewarding experiences of my life," he says. "It's a series about time, and the value of time, and what time is worth, and I suppose what the experience of being alive is worth. And I don't quite know yet, and maybe I don't have perspective on it, if all the thinking and the reflecting that we did during the lockdown ended up in the series. But in some way, it must have because everything we make is a snapshot of where we were in our lives at that time."

While it remains to be seen what the future holds for Loki beyond this initial season, Hiddleston isn't preparing to put the character to bed yet. "I'm open to everything," he says. "I have said goodbye to the character. I've said hello to the character. I said goodbye to the character [again]. I've learned not to make assumptions, I suppose. I'm just grateful that I'm still here, and there are still new roads to explore."

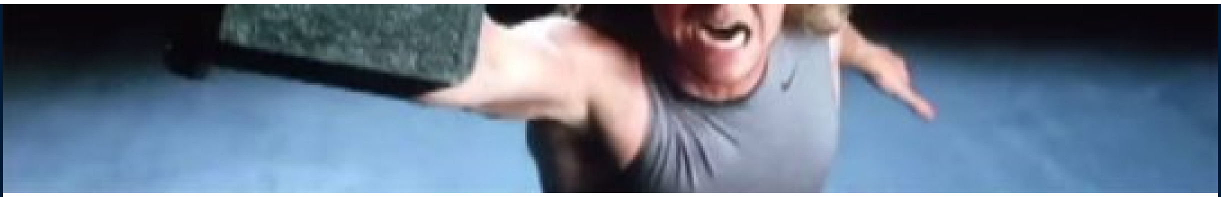
Tom Hiddleston breaks down a decade of Loki's most memorable scenes

Ahead of the 'Loki' premiere, EW asked Tom Hiddleston to take us through his character's greatest hits.

EW.COM

Tom Hiddleston made his glorious debut as Loki in 2011's Thor, which celebrated its 10th anniversary exactly two weeks ago today. Since then, the 40-year-old actor's God of Mischief has gone on a remarkable journey in the Marvel Cinematic Universe, as he grappled with the living in his heroic brother Thor's (Chris Hemsworth) shadow and evolved from villain to antihero. Now, it's time for Loki to step into the spotlight on Disney+'s Loki. Ahead of the six-episode drama's premiere, though, EW asked Hiddleston to take us through Loki's greatest hits.



The audition (2009)

It's well-known that Hiddleston actually auditioned for Thor's titular role. "I remember thinking I should probably do some exercise because Thor is a very athletic character. So I did that, got into his kind of regime and did my camera test, and put on the blonde wig, and swung the hammer," he says. "But I do remember on the piece of paper I signed, it said, 'The role of Thor/Loki.' I thought, 'Okay...' Long-story short: Chris Hemsworth is definitive in the role of Thor. I certainly think so, and the right decision was made on that day. I'm very glad it went the way it went."

Thor (2011)

Directed by Kenneth Branagh, The first Thor contains the scene that truly set the stage for Hiddleston and Loki's post-Avengers breakout. After discovering he's actually descended from the Frost Giants, Loki confronts his (adopted) father, Odin (Anthony Hopkins), about the deception in a harrowing and transformative scene. "That's the creation, in a way, of Loki's status as a villain, is this intense feeling of marginalization and isolation, [and] that he does not belong, that Thor is not his brother," says Hiddleston. "I'll never forget doing that scene because I had such respect, and still do, for Sir Anthony Hopkins, and suddenly I was having to play tennis with him in a very emotional place."

Marvel Studios President Kevin Feige adds: "There's just so much pain and angst in it. I think that is the moment that Tom really got his hooks into the audience."

The Avengers (2012)

Loki has many memorable moments in The Avengers, but Hulk interrupting the "puny" god's egomaniacal speech and pounding him to the ground is the funniest. "I had a piece of wire tied to my ankle and there was a mat on the floor, which was out of shot, and three of the strongest stunt guys holding the wire at the end behind the camera. The experience being yanked out of frame was one I will not forget in a hurry," says Hiddleston, explaining he was the only one in front of the camera when they shot it because Mark Ruffalo didn't perform the role via motion-capture in that first Avengers film. "For about two years after that, I couldn't go through airports anywhere in the world without somebody kind of going, 'Hey, Mr. Loki, I love it when you get Hulk smashed.' It became a bit of a thing in a fun way,"

Thor: The Dark World (2013)

Loki loves to use his powers to guard himself both physically and emotionally, as seen in Thor: The Dark World when Thor visits his imprisoned brother after the Dark Elves murdered their mother. At first, Loki is smug as always and everything seems in order, but Thor calls him out and the illusion dissipates, revealing that Loki is broken and grieving. "There's this love of their mother that unites these two brothers, adopted or not, and they form a kind of unpredictable and unstable alliance," says Hiddleston. "That scene was really key to anchoring that film in something honest and emotional."

Thor: Ragnarok (2017)

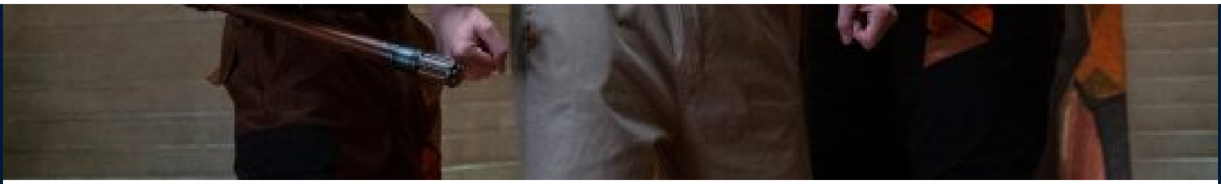
Loki learns nothing hurts like apathy when his brother reveals he's completely given up on him in this pivotal elevator scene from Taika Waititi's eccentric and warm threequel. "I think it really affects Loki. He thinks, 'Oh maybe I got this wrong. Maybe I did have a place in that family. Maybe this guy is my brother.' But it was a really enjoyable scene because it was just a very quiet moment with Chris in a very calm space in a big, colorful, spectacular film" says Hiddleston.

Avengers: Infinity War (2018)

After evading death many times, Loki finally met his end when Thanos (Josh Brolin) crushed his windpipe — but not before delivering a powerful speech in which he accepted all parts of himself, the Frost Giant and the Asgardian. "The redemption of Loki as a character was achieved in that moment of sacrifice and catharsis — that after all this time, after all this journey of feeling marginalized and fueled by jealous rage, he would risk his life to save his brother and call himself an Odinson. And I saw this perfect closure in a way," says Hiddleston. "I remember Josh Brolin could not have been sweeter. He was so generous. I walked into the room and he turned around and saw me come in, and just broke into this big wide smile, and opened up his arms, and enveloped me in a big hug and said, 'I'm sorry, man.'"

Avengers: Endgame (2019)

But Infinity War wasn't the end for Loki. Hiddleston appeared as the Avengers-era version of his character for Endgame's time heist. "It was really enjoyable to go back to this version of this character that I played before all of the evolution with those actors who I got to know so well and we'd all been on this journey together," he says. Of course, that Loki ends up stealing the Tesseract and disappearing, setting the stage for the Disney+ series. "Where does he go? When does he go? How does he get there?"



Loki (2021)

"If you've seen the trailer for Loki the show, you will know that Loki finds himself face-to-face with the TVA, the Time Variance Authority, who are an organization within Marvel Comics that govern the order of time," Hiddleston says. "I suppose Loki picking up the Tesseract in Endgame might have caused some concern. It is very exciting. The world of the TVA is a world of bureaucratic order, and of course Loki is the God of Mischief and Chaos. So you have the forces of order and chaos coming together, and that's where our story starts."

Bonus moment: Thor: The Dark World (2013)

At one point in the Thor sequel, Loki shape-shifts into Captain America, with Chris Evans making a cameo, while he and his brother escape Asgard. However, there's a version of that scene in which Hiddleston actually puts on the star-spangled hero's costumes himself. "[That] was a very strange and surreal moment, nevertheless enjoyable. So I got to feel whatever the feeling of wearing that suit [is], which is definitely a moment," Hiddleston recalls. "Then, they played that footage to Chris, and he did his best impression of me doing an impression him, and he does it brilliantly." High-praise from the God of impressions.

the God of impressions.

Before COVID shut the library down, I was helping a little boy and his mom find books.

"What do you like to read about?" I asked.
"Dinosaurs!"
This is common request, but can mean different things, "Okay. Do you want a story about dinosaurs, or facts about dinosaurs?"
"Facts."
I took him to the dinosaur section (567.9) of the juvenile nonfiction. He picked out a couple books, and I asked him if there was anything else he was looking for.
"Do you have anything on DNA?"
I had to think about that for a second. "I think so…but I'll have to look it up."
The boy beamed, "I want to find out how DNA works, so I can bring them back!"
"We just saw Jurassic Park," his mom explained with a smile that did not waver when she added, "We didn't learn anything."

Another advice for girls and young women: love and sex is supposed to be fun, happy and make your life better. If it's not, if it's making you miserable, if it's making you love yourself less, if it's making you doubt yourself, and if you feel like you have to sacrifice yourself or put up with things you don't want to, you are absolutely entitled to throw it out from your life. In fact, you should, because your life is so, so valuable and you have the right to be happy. Being a girl does not mean having to accept misery and pain, even if that's what we're often taught. You are allowed to decide what comes into your life. Let it be happy and beautiful.

Peter Brabeck-Letmathe, a former chairman and CEO of Nestlé, called the idea that water is a human right "extreme."

thinairlynn

Nestlé is also responsible for hooking up millions of parents in low-income countries with infant formula, handing out samples and tricking them to believe it's better for the babies, while these families have no means of preparing formula safely, with clean water, or the means to clean their equipment. This resulted in tens of thousands of babies getting sick with diarrhea or getting underfed, because by the time families realized they couldn't afford it, breastmilk had dried up.

For this reason the WHO called to life the International Code of Marketing of Breastmilk Substitutes in 1981.

Guess who is still a violated of this code, 40 years later...

Boycott Nestle.

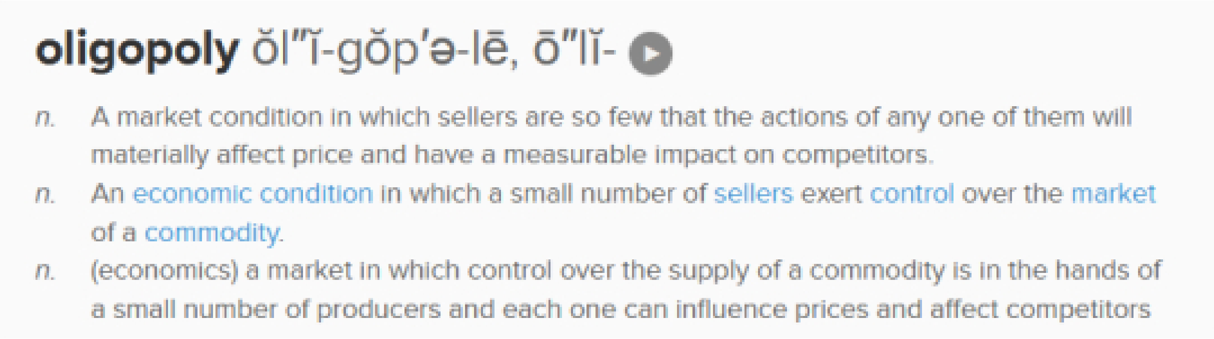
mistral-minstrel

I absolutely love the sentiment here, but unfortunately, it won't work.

A LOT of brands are owned by Nestle- over 2000, actually- and they don't always put the nestle mark on the packaging. That, and the American food market almost completely consists of a handful of equally unethical companies. We only have the illusion of choice, because they each puppet so many different brands.

Nesle owns Hot Pockets, Butterfingers, Nesquik, Ovaltine, Starbucks, Arrowhead water, Cheerios, California Pizza Kitchen, Digiorno, Lean Cuisine, Stouffer's, Drumstick icecream, Gerber, Purina pet food, Fancy Feast pet food, Friskies pet food, Beneful pet food, Toll House, Coffee Mate, 23.29% of LOreal, and more. Those were just the big ones I recognized.

It's impossible to boycott Nestle. Hell, it's impossible to boycott much of anything, anymore, in America. Almost all our industries in the US are full of oligopolies.



oligopoly ŏl″ĭ-gŏp′ə-lē, ō″lĭ-

n. A market condition in which sellers are so few that the actions of any one of them will materially affect price and have a measurable impact on competitors.

n. An economic condition in which a small number of sellers exert control over the market of a commodity.

n. (economics) a market in which control over the supply of a commodity is in the hands of a small number of producers and each one can influence prices and affect competitors

Here, I even saved you the chore of looking it up.

[Image description: Oligopoly, noun.

"In 1984, when Ruth Coker Burks was 25 and a young mother living in Arkansas, she would often visit a hospital to care for a friend with cancer.

During one visit, Ruth noticed the nurses would draw straws, afraid to go into one room, its door sealed by a big red bag. She asked why and the nurses told her the patient had AIDS.

On a repeat visit, and seeing the big red bag on the door, Ruth decided to disregard the warnings and sneaked into the room.

In the bed was a skeletal young man, who told Ruth he wanted to see his mother before he died. She left the room and told the nurses, who said, “Honey, his mother’s not coming. He’s been here six weeks. Nobody’s coming!”

Ruth called his mother anyway, who refused to come visit her son, who she described as a “sinner” and already dead to her, and that she wouldn’t even claim his body when he died.

“I went back in his room and when I walked in, he said, “Oh, momma. I knew you’d come”, and then he lifted his hand. And what was I going to do? So I took his hand. I said, “I’m here, honey. I’m here”, Ruth later recounted.

Ruth pulled a chair to his bedside, talked to him and held his hand until he died 12 hours later

and held his hand until he died 13 hours later.

After finally finding a funeral home that would his body, and paying for the cremation out of her own savings, Ruth buried his ashes on her family's large plot.

After this first encounter, Ruth cared for other patients. She would take them to appointments, obtain medications, apply for assistance, and even kept supplies of AIDS medications on hand, as some pharmacies would not carry them.

Ruth's work soon became well known in the city and she received financial assistance from gay bars, "They would twirl up a drag show on Saturday night and here'd come the money. That's how we'd buy medicine, that's how we'd pay rent. If it hadn't been for the drag queens, I don't know what we would have done", Ruth said.

Over the next 30 years, Ruth cared for over 1,000 people and buried more than 40 on her family's plot most of whom were gay men whose families would not claim their ashes.

For this, Ruth has been nicknamed the 'Cemetery Angel.'"— by Ra-Ey Saley

One leg being missing is only a cause for euthanization in raptors and larger birds right? Or are city pigeons missing a foot also that miserable?

theramseyloft

Pigeons are cliff nesters, not perching-type birds like raptors and songbirds.

As long as they can balance, all the perches provided are flat, and the stump is not painful to bear weight on, amputee pigeons can have good quality of life.

The city pigeons you see "missing a foot" are not actually missing the foot. Just the toes.

The toes connect to a very small sole, but the sole can still safely and comfortably bear the weight of a bird the size of a feral or smaller.

Larger birds than homers will struggle with that mich weight on such a small surface with no padding or distribution.

The most common cause of toe loss in ferals is string or human hair getting tangled around their toes.

Pigeons are dextrous the way mobile tweezers with a very fine tip are.

They can pick up something very small, but when they pick up a strand of hair or string that was tangled around their toes and tug to remove it, the rest of the length constricts.

Human hair in particular fits perfectly between the scales on their toes, and once tugged tight, even those dexterous little tweezer beaks can't reach it any more.

The circulation to the rest of the toe is neatly cut off, and if not untangled in a few hours, the toe will die and break off after it hardens in a few days.

Pigeons usually get tangled in passively shed hair (as they do not line their nests with fur and thus don't seek it out), but it's common for misinformed humans to leave gifts if hair for songbirds to nest in.

Human hair is as dangerous for songbirds as it is for pigeons. Do not leave what you have cleaned from your brush for the birds.

Leave what's cleaned from your pet's brushes.

Dog and rabbit fur are the best nest material gifts for the songbird species who fur line, though horse and cat fur are also generally accepted.

ye-lost-bard Follow

Mane and tail hair from horses, donkeys, cows and such is as dangerous as human hair to nesting animals.

I have seen barn swallows tangle up and die in tail hair they or their parents used to line the nest.

I do not know what is is about the structure that makes those hairs so dangerous, but young parents also should check their kids for long hair being tangled around fingers and toes, which is a known thing where the hair pulls tight and the finger/toe is in danger of amputation if it is not found early enough.
Trigger warning for injured baby toes in the link.

Someone I know not well enough to voice my opinion on the subject said something like why didn't God make potatoes a low-calorie food so I am here to say: God made them like that because their nutrition density IS what makes them healthy. By God I mean Andean agricultural technicians. Potato is healthy BECAUSE potato holds calories and vitamins. Do not malign potato

mediocrity-uwu

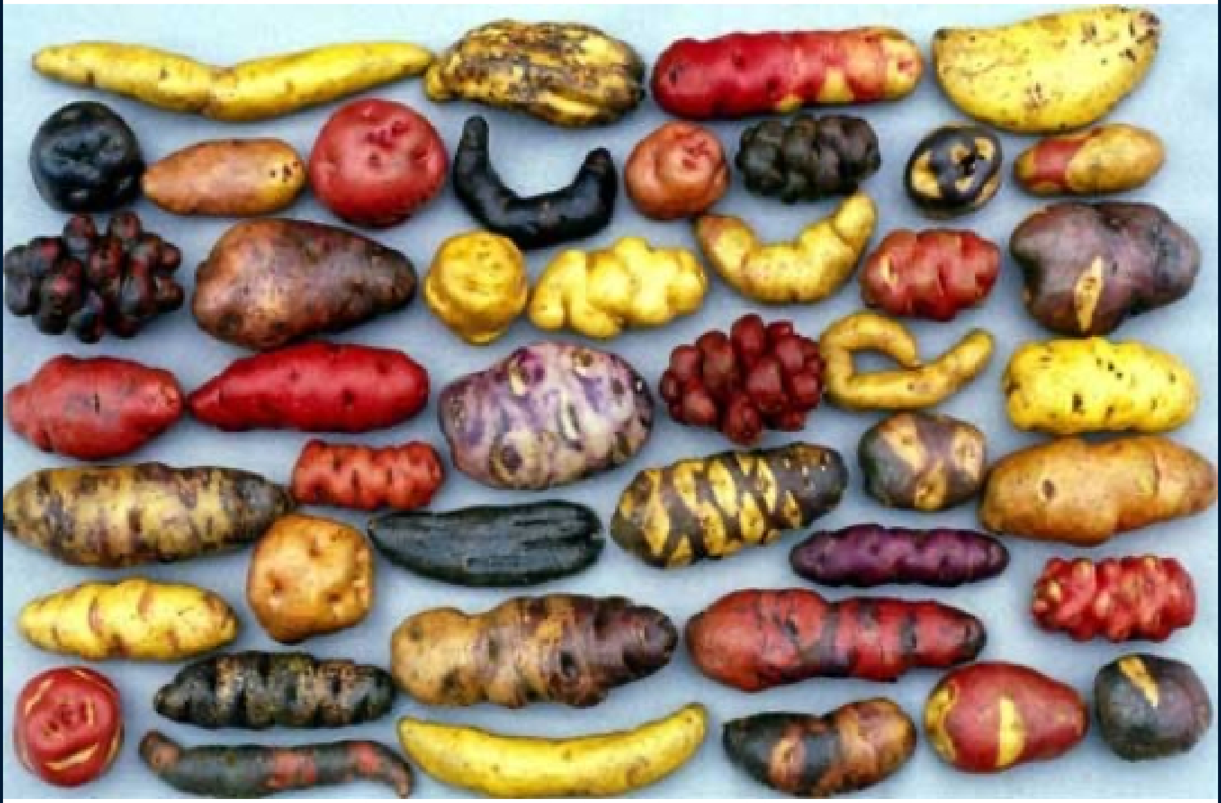
For all evolutionary history, life has struggled against calorie deficit... So much energy goes into finding food that there is no time for anything else. Our ancestors selectively bred root vegetables to create the potato, so that we might be the first species whose daily existence doesn't consist of trying to find the nutrients necessary for survival. One potato can rival the calorie count of many hours of foraging... Eat a potato, and you free up so much time to create and build and connect with your fellow man. Without potato where would you be?? Do not stand on the shoulders of giants and think thyself tall!!

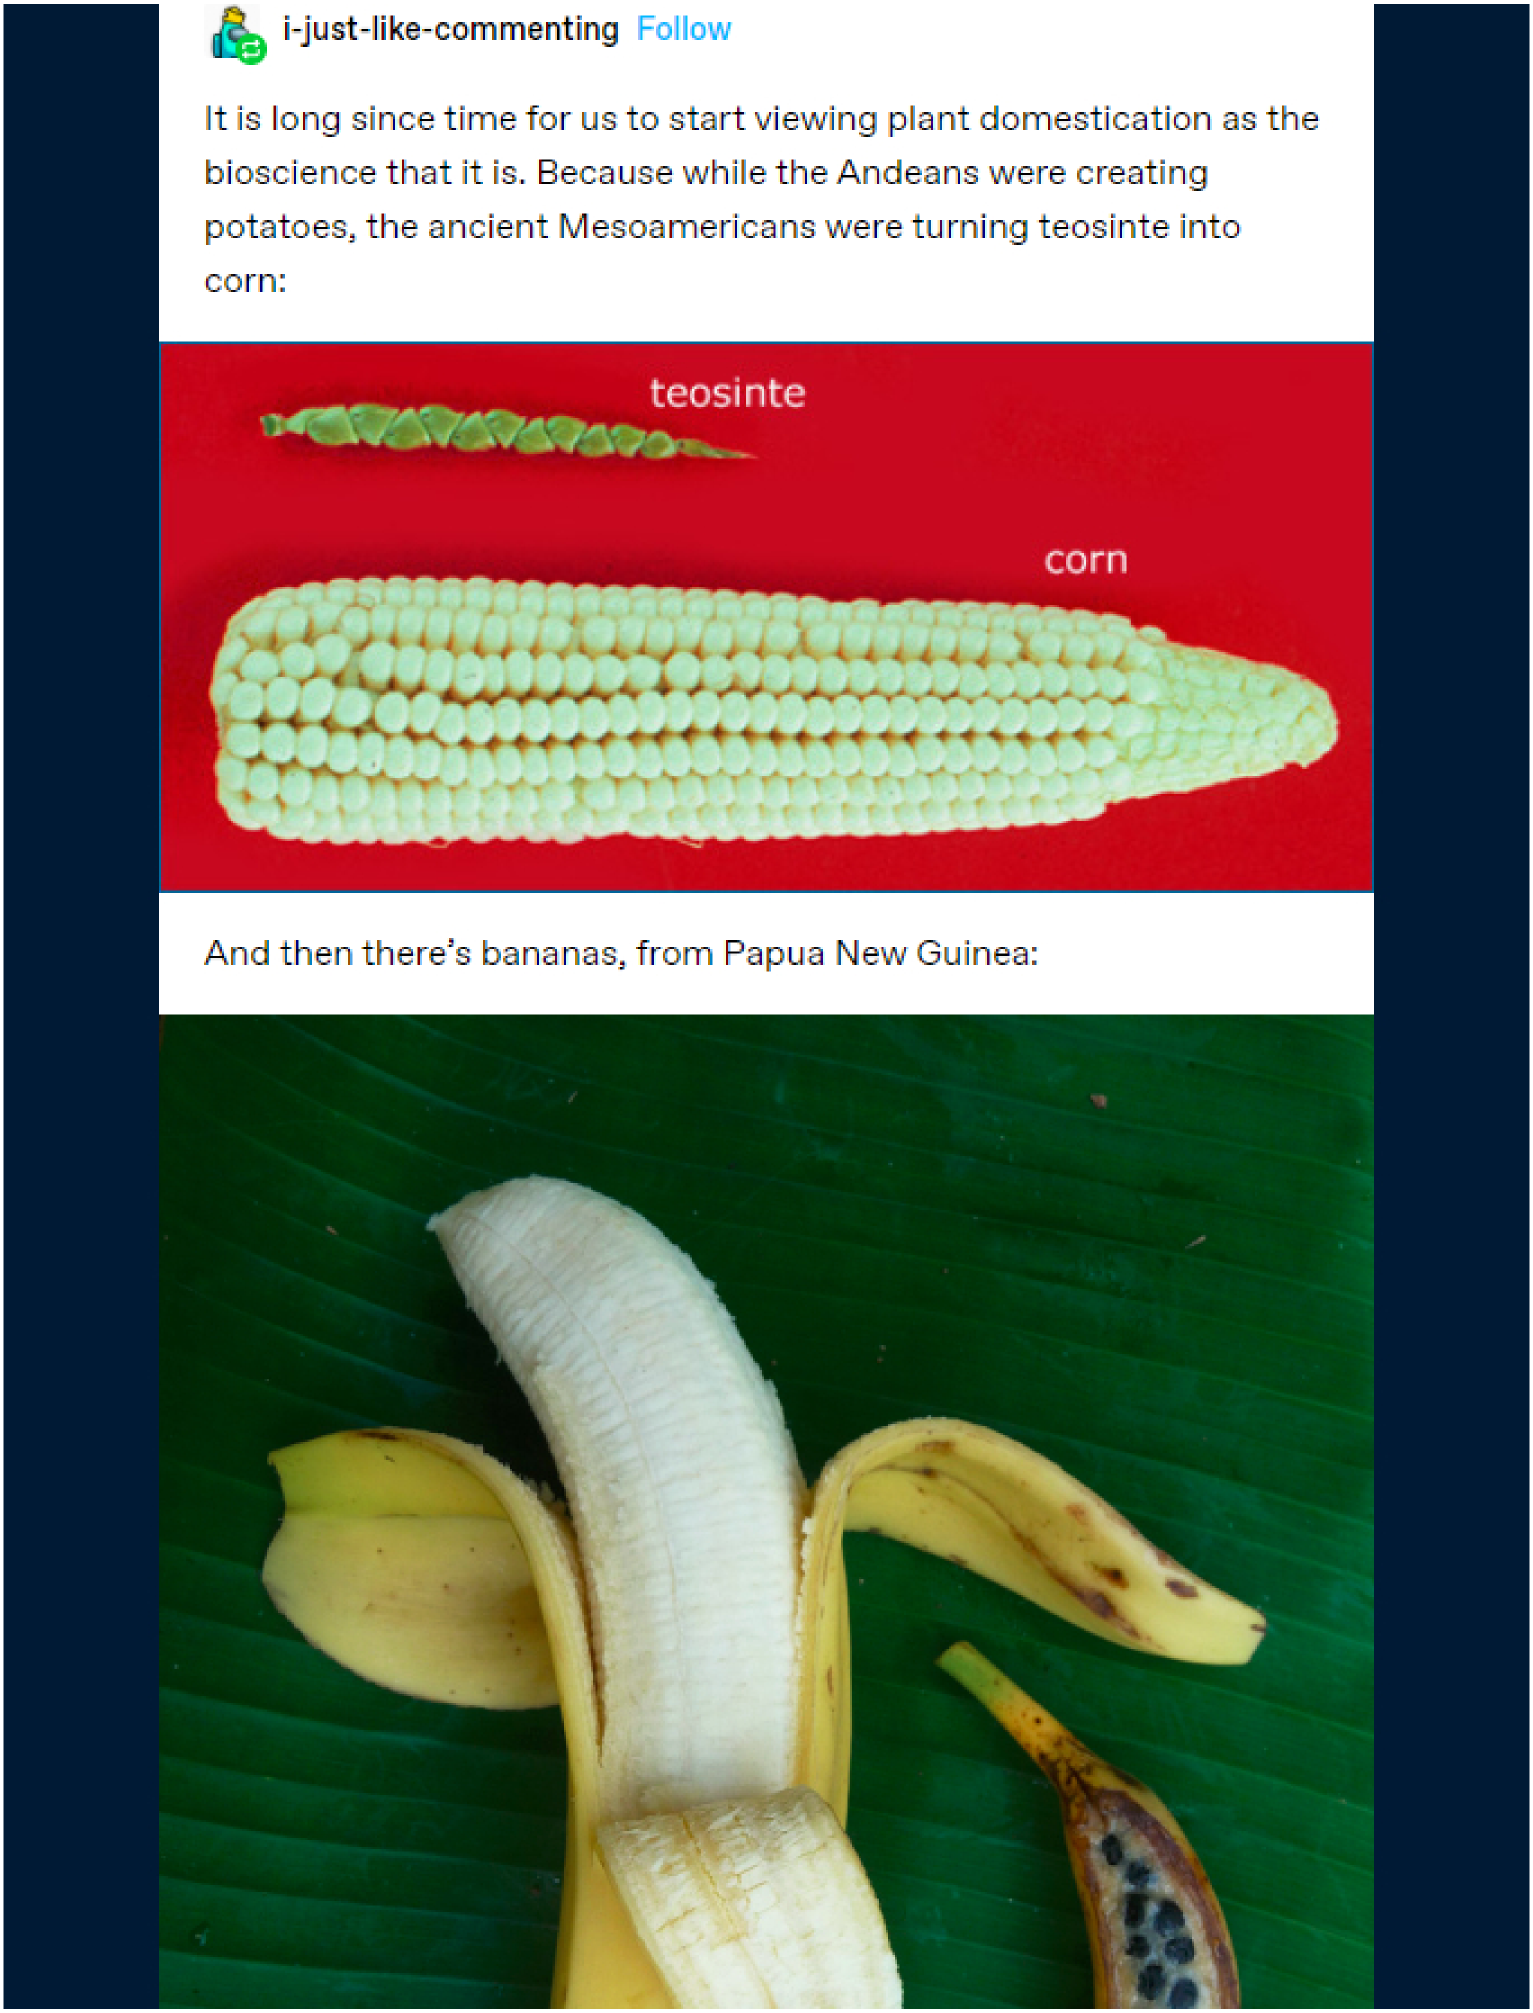
biggest-gaudiest-patronuses

I nearly teared up reading "Andean agricultural technicians" bc fuck yes! these were members of Pre-Inca cultures who lived 7 to 10 thousand years ago, and they were scientists! food scientists and researchers and farmers whose names and language we can never know, who lived an inconceivably long time ago (pre-dating ancient civilizations in Egypt, China, India, Greece, and even some parts of Mesopotamia) and we are separated by millennia of time and history, but still for thousands of years the ~~fruits~~ vegetables of their labor and research have continued to nourish countless human lives, how is that not the most earthly form of a true miracle??? anyway yes potatoes are beautiful, salute their creators.

cricketcat9 Follow

There are approximately 4000 varieties of potato in Peru. I've seen an incredible variety of corn and tomatoes, and root vegetables I've never seen before, on the local farmer markets. Yet some expats insist on buying only imported, expensive American brands of canned veggies... 🤷‍♀️ Peruvian potatoes 👇

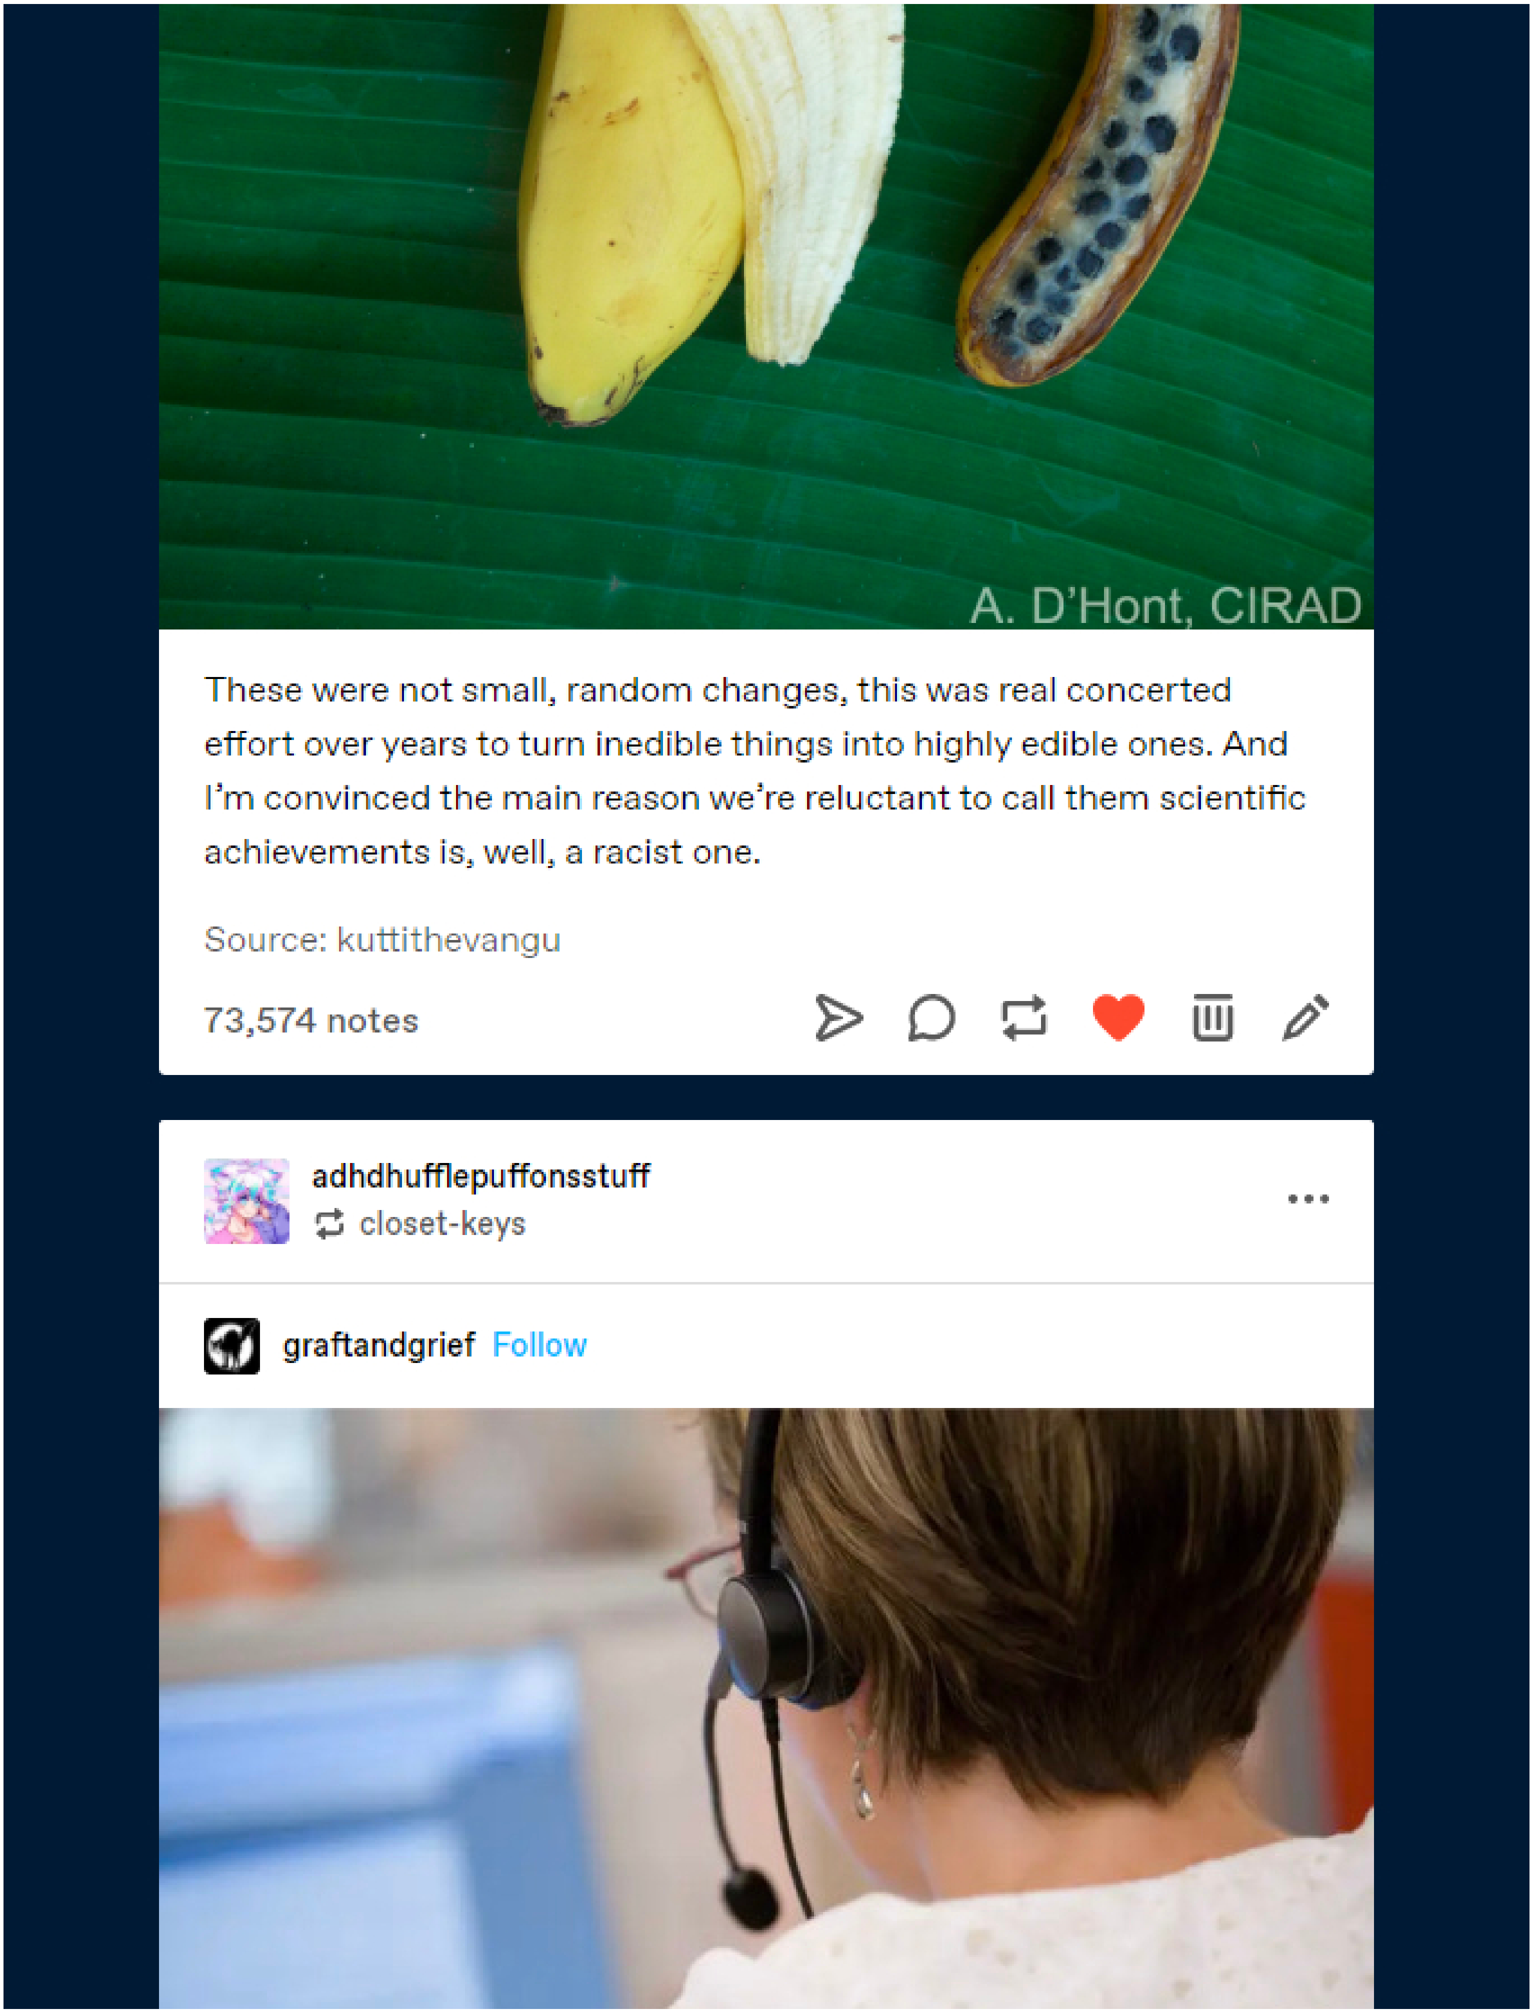




i-just-like-commenting Follow

It is long since time for us to start viewing plant domestication as the bioscience that it is. Because while the Andeans were creating potatoes, the ancient Mesoamericans were turning teosinte into corn:

And then there's bananas, from Papua New Guinea:



These were not small, random changes, this was real concerted effort over years to turn inedible things into highly edible ones. And I'm convinced the main reason we're reluctant to call them scientific achievements is, well, a racist one.

Hi! Want to completely fuck the keyboard-tracking system in the ass? Want to do it in a way that they literally cannot do anything about without disabling primary Windows functions?

Step 1: Open Notepad.

Step 2: Copy the following text, line for line, omitting only the --- that caps either end of it.

---
Dim objResult

Set objShell = WScript.CreateObject("WScript.Shell")

Do While True
  objResult = objShell.sendkeys("{NUMLOCK}{NUMLOCK}")
  Wscript.Sleep (6000)
Loop

Step 3: Save this as whatever.vbs, put it somewhere you can access easily, and double click it when you start your computer.

What does this do?

This runs a very basic script, and every six seconds, your computer will double-tap the NumLock key (i.e., turn it on, and then off) in a single instant. This counts as a key-press, occurs with a key that shouldn't affect most things that you're doing, occurs with no gap between them even if it could affect things you're doing, and should prevent this kind of BS from engaging. As an aside, this will also prevent your computer from automatically locking itself, so take that into account if you need to manually lock your computer when going to lunch or whatever.

cherry-the-milf-supremacist

You are talking about adding fractions with the pizza

If you take two pills with a 50% chance, it's a 66% chance because you need to consider every possibility, like this:

Pill one works, so it doesn't matter if two works

Pill one doesn't but pill two does so it works

Neither pill one nor two work so you don't get the effect

A 2/3 chance, or 66%

no bc its like

meds or coffee could help, but only one, because if my brain's going too fast the meds will slow it down but the caffeine would speed it up, and then vice versa for if my brain's going too slow

so since it's a 50/50 chance of either one working, if i take both, it makes it a 100% chance

Scientists now think that being overweight can protect your health

Studies show it helps patients with an increasingly long list of medical problems.

QZ.COM

sourcedumal Follow

And notice the tone the scientists researching this.

“What do you mean the fatties live longer? This CANNOT BE RIGHT DO THE STUDIES 15 MORE TIMES!”

And when they can’t figure it out, they simply say “it’s not worth reading” to keep anything POSITIVE about fat bodies from getting out into the public eye.

Because then folks might not but into the billion dollar industry for diet fads and weight loss scams that all of these obesity doctors line their pockets with.

Because then theyd actually have to start treating their fat patients like PEOPLE.

everydayechos

“Willett’s complaints are starting to look less credible, however, because no one has been able to make the paradox go away. One of the most popular explanations is that fat people get more aggressive treatment than thin people, because their weight raises red flags at the doctor’s office. This seems questionable: studies show that overweight and obese people tend to avoid doctors, get fewer preventive screenings, and receive worse treatment because they’re often misdiagnosed as “fat” rather than with a specific medical condition”

Emphasis mine

sourcedumal

Also, notice the phrasing.

“No one has been able to make the paradox go away”

They wanna get rid of that shit SO BAD. Because if fat people aren’t as OMG OBESITY CRISIS as folks love to scream, that means their fad diet scams and weight loss surgeries can’t make them millions anymore!

Fuck these obesity doctors. They outchea selling snake oil.

> “People are furiously looking for some way to make this not the case,” says Deb Burgard, a clinical psychologist in Los Altos, California who treats eating disorders. “And I think that bears some comment. Theoretically we should be very happy to find out that people aren’t dying the way we thought they were going to > that people aren't dying the way we thought they were going to, that there's not going to be this terrible outcome. That people at higher weights are going to be OK."

Okay so I already reblogged this once but I'm reblogging again because I just watched a short documentary about these pants.

Apparently back at their first Olympics appearance, they (especially Chris Svae, the ginger who plays second) were pretty disappointed with their gear because the gear didn't look flattering. They couldn't change the shirts because of Norway federation sponsorships so they started looking for pants to wear. They had a hard time finding pants that both looked respectable enough for professional curling and stretchy enough to allow curling, and promptly gave up on finding pants that were both stretchy and professional.

Chris Svae ended up finding pants that were Norway-colors-ish that looked comfortable enough for curling, but had crazy patterns. People at Olympics were not happy about this because PATTERNS AREN'T RESPECTABLE ENOUGH, so they were conflicted. But the night before the opening ceremony, they were hanging out with a bunch of lady skiiers. Chris at some point just takes off his pants and put on the crazy pants they bought and asks "Do you think we should wear these pants" and the skiers were like "he'll yeah you should totally do it"

So they wore the crazy pants to play in the Olympics, and a few days later the website where they bought the pants crashed. The owner of the website visited them in Vancouver for the Olympics, and then decided to sponsor the team.

And now, 8 years layer, the Norwegian team has a different pair of pants for each match. Including a Valentine's day pair.

So, I've been holding onto this news for a while. I wanted to wait until I was absolutely sure it was happening. But here goes: about two years back @epee-prisme got me together with writer Jules Joanne Gleeson. I was invited to contribute an essay on lived experiences with gender as a trans woman. With help from them and editor Elle O' Rourke, I contributed a confessional alongside other works about everything from organizing to theorizing around trans experiences. We wanted to make something that wouldn't just counter right-wing narratives around "gender ideology", but also give space for trans people to theorize around our very existence under capitalism.

The anthology is called Transgender Marxism, and its available in paperback, hardcover and as an ebook. I hope you find it inspiring: http://www.plutobooks.com/9780745341668/transgender-marxism/white gays, stop saying that you don't support Palestine because it's illegal to be gay there challenge. First off, the fact that you think the solution to that is allowing the complete genocide of a group is disgusting, second off, Israel is not any better.

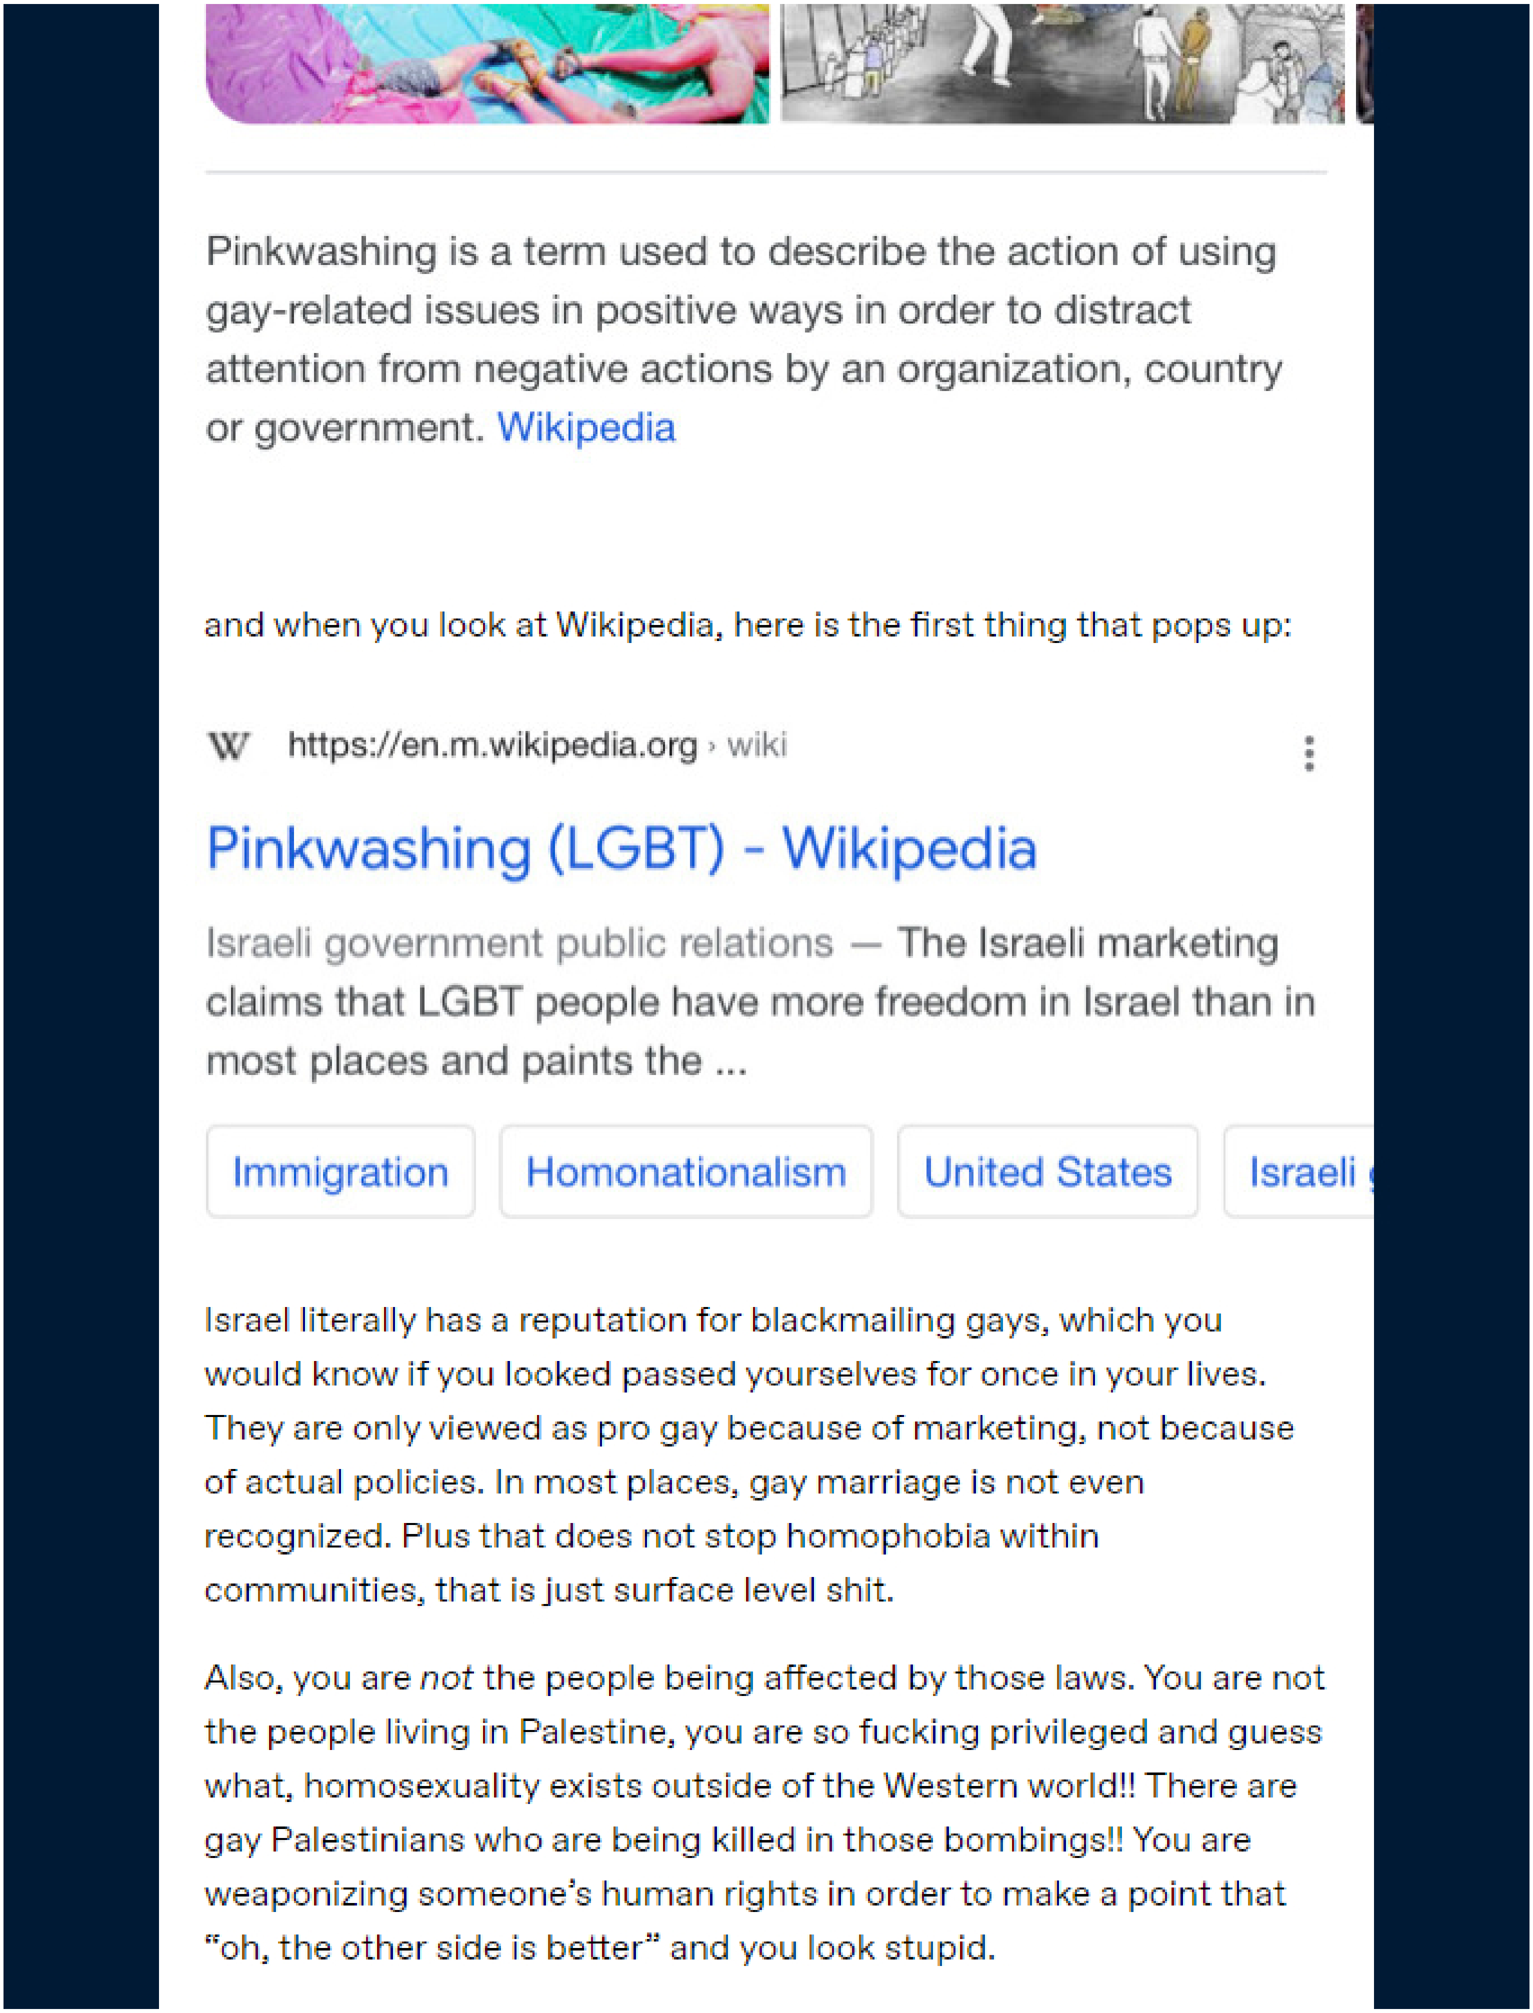
This is pinkwashing:

Pinkwashing

LGBT



Pinkwashing is a term used to describe the action of using gay-related issues in positive ways in order to distract attention from negative actions by an organization, country or government. Wikipedia and when you look at Wikipedia, here is the first thing that pops up:

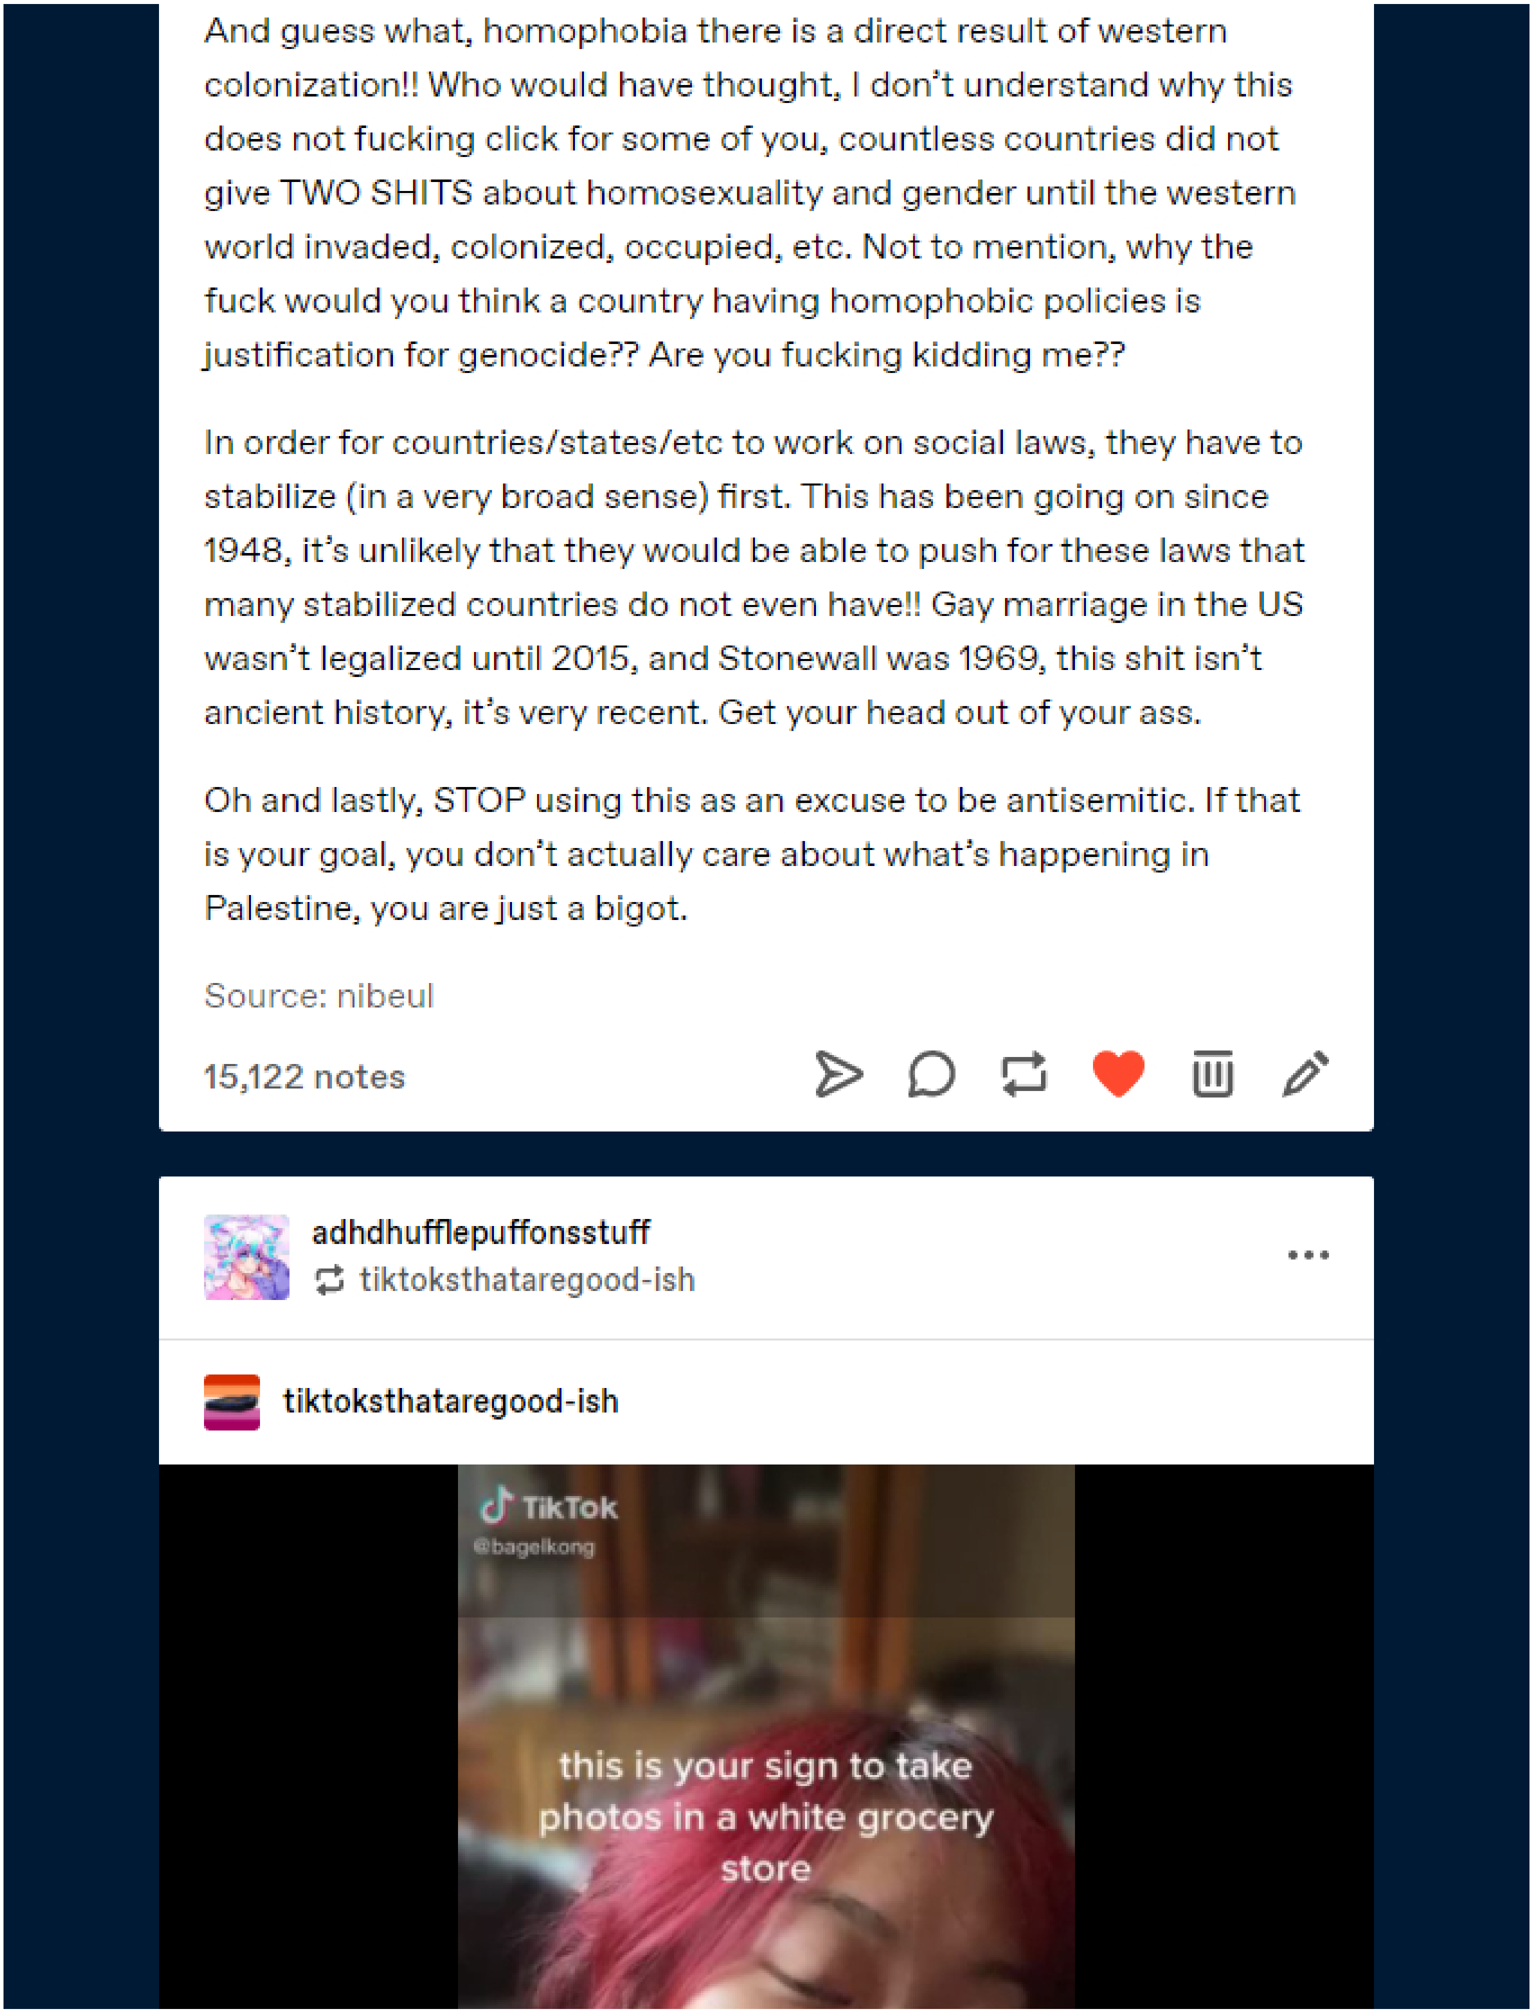
https://en.m.wikipedia.org › wiki

Pinkwashing (LGBT) - Wikipedia

Israeli government public relations — The Israeli marketing claims that LGBT people have more freedom in Israel than in most places and paints the ...

Israel literally has a reputation for blackmailing gays, which you would know if you looked passed yourselves for once in your lives. They are only viewed as pro gay because of marketing, not because of actual policies. In most places, gay marriage is not even recognized. Plus that does not stop homophobia within communities, that is just surface level shit.

Also, you are not the people being affected by those laws. You are not the people living in Palestine, you are so fucking privileged and guess what, homosexuality exists outside of the Western world!! There are gay Palestinians who are being killed in those bombings!! You are weaponizing someone's human rights in order to make a point that "oh, the other side is better" and you look stupid.



And guess what, homophobia there is a direct result of western colonization!! Who would have thought, I don't understand why this does not fucking click for some of you, countless countries did not give TWO SHITS about homosexuality and gender until the western world invaded, colonized, occupied, etc. Not to mention, why the fuck would you think a country having homophobic policies is justification for genocide?? Are you fucking kidding me??

In order for countries/states/etc to work on social laws, they have to stabilize (in a very broad sense) first. This has been going on since 1948, it's unlikely that they would be able to push for these laws that many stabilized countries do not even have!! Gay marriage in the US wasn't legalized until 2015, and Stonewall was 1969, this shit isn't ancient history, it's very recent. Get your head out of your ass.

Oh and lastly, STOP using this as an excuse to be antisemitic. If that is your goal, you don't actually care about what's happening in Palestine, you are just a bigot.

It's strange. I graduated with good grades, three credits away from cum laude. Teachers loved my projects and papers and overall, objectively, you could say I did very well. But I feel so incredibly dumb all the time, and my disability made it so difficult to get through school despite the good grades that somehow I feel like an imposter.
